Just as captain Raine was on the eve of leaving Valparais for this part of the world once more, he was informed of a most mar yellous affair relating to an American whaler, that had been attacked by a whale at sea in so violent and dreadful a manner as to occasion the vessel to founder and most of the crew eventually to perish; some thing of whose disastrous have yet have been favoured with and shall present the same to our readers. Capt. Raine received information that there were three men on Ducie's Island, who had preferred remain Ducie's Island, who had preferred remain Ducies issued, who had preferred remain ing there rather than venture across the ocean in a boat, to which the crew had been compelled to fly the ship. The com-mander of the Surrey becoming opportune-ly acquainted with those painful and distressing circumstances, humanely determined on calling at Ducie's Island and be nstrumental in restoring three unfortunate fellow creatures to society, and very possi-bly rescue them from a miserable end, particularly as this island was no great distance out of his tract from Valparaiso to New Holland, On Thursday, 5th April capt Holland, On Thursday, 5th April capt Raine considering himself within a very short distance of Brooks island which is laid down in Noric's Epitome to be in lat 26 deg. 50 min S. and lon. 124 deg. 37 min. W kept a good look out. At ahout 2 pm. land was perceived which turned out to be an island in lat. 24 deg. 26 min. As the versel neared the land a gnn was discharged and shortly after the three poor men were seen to issue forth from the woods. The boats were presently lowered, capt. Raine taking one himself. On approaching the shore it was found not only

Pollard, &c. Cn 13th Nov 1890 they were among the whales and the three boats were lowered down; the mate's boat boats were lowered down; the mate's boat got store and had returned to the ship to be repaired. Shortly after a whale of the largest class struck the ship and knocked part of the false keel off, just abreast of the main channels. The animal then remain ed for some time along side, endeavouring to clasp the ship with her jaws, but could not accomplish it; she then turned, went round the stern and came up on the other side, and went away ahead about a quarter of a mile, and then suddenly turning, came of a mile, and then suddenly turning, came at the ship with tremendous velocity, head The vessel was going at the rate of knots, but such was the force when she struck the ship, which was under the cat head that the vessel had sternway, at the rate of 3 or 4 knots, the consequence was, that the sea rushed into the cabin windows, every man on deck was knocked down. and worse than all the bows were stove completely in, and in a very few minutes the vessel filled and went on her beam ends At this unhappy juncture the captain and second mate were fast to a whale each; but on beholding the awful catastrophe that had taken place, immediately cut from the fish, and made for the ship. By cutting a way the masts, the vessel righted; the up per deck was then scuttled; and some wa ter and bread were procured for the two boats, in which they were compelled to re-main, as all thoughts of saving the ship were given up.

In expectation of falling in with some
