PORT AU PRINCE.
Letters from Port au Prince of the loth and 20th ult, state that the place had been in a bustle for several days, by the marching and countermarching of troops destined to take possession of the Spanish part of the island; from all the principal towns in which deputations had been sent in, bearing testimonials of their adhesion to the government of the republic, under President Bover.

The acquisition is said to be valuable The acquisition is said to be valuable principally in a military point of view, the porulation being small, not exceeding 40,000 persons, and the trade being inconsiderable, the exports consisting of a few cargoes of mahogany, a few hides, a small quantity of molasses, and a little tobacco. The fiscal concerns of the Havtien Government, must nove an object of wongerment.

It does not owe one cent, and has from ten to fifteet millions of specie in the tressury! The art sof occupation, which will not exceed to the men, will lessen the amount, but it all not be less curious that the black government of St. Domingo should be the only one in modern times able to manage its concerns so as not to antici-nate its income, and have funds in tradiness pate its income, and have funds in readiness for any important exigency.—Would it not be advisable in Mr. Monroe to import a Secretary of the Treasury from that island?

LETTERS FROM THE REV. MR.

Smyrna, Nov. 15, 1821.

Since I last had this pleasure, nothing particularly interesting has occurred, even at this interesting moment. The negocian tions with Humas, at least so far as the public are informed remain in the same state of ancestainty. Abelieving as L do, and ever shall, that the Russian government, or at least as part of ith have been the instigators of the Greek rivolt, I do not see how they can abandon their cause, at least without obtaining condition, that it will be difficult for the Greek of the Jessident to grant, should be ever a cinclined; for despot as he is, so chief, not eyen the Tresident of the United States, is more obliged to court public opinion and sentiment than he is, on all great occasions: God only knows what may eventually grow out of this insurrection of the Greeks, for all Europe appear in feel themselves particularly interested in the state of Constantinose. tion of the Greeks, for all Europe appear in feel themselves particularly interested in the fate of Constantinople. In fact, the life of Constantinople. In fact, the life of Constantinople in the fate of Europe is such, that great events may be looked for eet long. It appears as if the sound of a rolle cannon would be a signal of general was the Turkish fleet has returned to the Darl spelles; immediately on its aurival; great numbers of their sailors, miserable ones as they are, deseted, and its will not be an easy matter for the Porte to send out another fleet before apring. The danger of navigating the Ar. spring. The danger of navigating the Archipelago in the winter season with heavy ships, would be great for any nation; for the Turks it would be attended with certain destruction. At present the Greeks are entirely free from the apprehension of the Turkish fleet, and are at liberty to turn their attention to the operations in the Morea, where they have of late had many important advantages. The inhabitants of the different islands, together with the great numbers of Greeks who are daily leaving Asia, all find their was to the Morea where it is probable at least. The guestion of Grecian independence will be decided. It is said they have intentions of attacking Candia this minter. The island contains away. said they have intentions of attacking Candia this squietr. The island contains several well fortified towns—very considerable riches—and a lituation particularly desirable for the Greeks. The conduct of the Turks in that Island has been so horribly barbarous that I should feel little pity for them if they fell into the hands of the Greeks neither age nor see have been spared. After they had induced the Greeks to lay down their arms—those who exaped the dreadful massacre fled to the mouth fins, when at last they have found themselves sufficiently strong to descendint to the plains; and the town of Canna is now actually blockaded by them, and so strictly that no and the town of Canna is now actually blockaded by them, and so strictly that no Turk wentures out of its walls. They have cut off the supply of fresh water, & should their fleet blockade the port, the Turks will be forced by famine to surrender before spring. Here we are beginning to feel the want of the Greeks already, and I shall not be surprised if nearly all of them get away this winter. Every friend to humanity-must rejoice at their escape from this nity-must rejoice at their escape from this place, and pleased to be assisting them too On this score they owe great obligations to the French consul and marine—the Eng-lish, on the contrary, haw been far from acting so generous a part. In fact, a con-siderable part of what is called Franks, are much against the Greek. siderable part of what is called Franks, are much against the Greeks. Certainly their general character is not calculated to obtain for them either the love or esteem of other nations. Still I shall hope after they have suffered with their revolution exposes them to, they will be fit to live under, at least, an interpendent government—thus much appears to me certain, that the Greeks and Turks can never again inhabit the same country. The Sultan has not power to protect their lives, even that of their nocent Smyrnites, who are daily exposed nocent Smyrnites, who are daily exposed to be shot like wild beasts. In fact, few days pass that more or less of them are not killed, and that with the most perfect impunity, the Pacha not daring to take notice of it. As yet, the Franks have been respected. Perhans the presence of sames. pected. Perhaps the presence of a respect, able naval force has in no small manner occasioned it—still a residence in a country where murders are committed with impu-nity in the public streets in broadday light, where all kinds of subordination is at an end, is by no means pleasant. Frequently my feelings have been so wrought on, by the cruellies I have witnessed, that I should

at the moment, have been pleased to see the city in flames, and which, we are not without our fears, some day may be the case All these disturbances, the flight or concealment of all the Greek merchants concealment of all the Greek merchants and traders, has naturally a great effect on trade; generally speaking, an unfavourable one; still, as it occasions great variations in prices of our produce, some have been in prices of our produce, some nave been lucky enough to profit thereby.

All flags have been constantly well treated by both Turks and Greeks, notwithstanding the infamous lies of a newspaper printed in this town, charging the Greeks with piracy, and on the cases alluded to, when they knew the reports they had print-ed were not true, had not liberality enough to contradict their statements, which have gone the round of the European papers.— We have just received news from Constan tinople, that all the great officers of state have been changed; how this may effect the negociations with Russia, remains to be seen. Some way or other, I think the time has come for the Turksto quit Europe.

time has come for the Turksto quit Europe.

November 22.—Since the date of the foregoing, we have been in great confusion, two Franks have been killed by the Turks. On attacking the third, two Turks were killed—in the night all the Turkish rabble came to the entrance of our quarters, with the intention of setting fire to it The assurance given to them by the French consult that in such an event the Franks would immediately retaliate on them in the same way, had the effect to make the better part of the Turks exert themselves to prevent so dreadful a proceeding, in which they have dreadful a proceeding, in which they have thus far succeeded. The next day our streets were filled with Turks: the few Franks who ventured out being armed, the Turks thought there might be some danger in at tacking them, and contented themselves with killing upwards of two hundred poor Greeks. Yesterday and to-day it appears quiet-still no business is doing, and most of the houses shut. Another French frigate has arrived, which adds so much to our has arrived, which adds so much to our force, that I do not fear the Turks proceeding in a body the atremities; what is most to fear is being that in the street by some desparate raical who has neither home nor name to lose. Most of the Franks are now armed, and the Purks being aware of it, I hope will make them a little cautious. hope will make them a little cautious.

November 24 .- We are again all quiet, but of that sort which cannot be co on for one minute—the chiefs of the infer nal janissaries have taken the town under nal janissaries have taken the town under their protection. We have not heard of a-ny murders to-day. If you hear of a war between the Turks and Russians, then you may think us badly off—on the contrary all will go well For my per however, I may hope, I have but little region to expect that the peace will be meaned; if it is, the Russians have morn patience that I tehlink ...

Extract of a letter from Rev. Mr. Fisk, one Exitées of a letter from ner, mr. risk, one of the American Missionaries to Jerusalem, to a gentaleman in this village, dated.

Smyrns, Sept 16, 1821.

I-sometimes find it useful to finalitute in my mind a comparison between the institu-tions and people of this country and of A-merica. I can scarcely fancy myself in the same world or among the same race of be-ings. Think of a government in which svery office is sold to the highest bidder, and in which a criminal many almost uniformly obtain his freedom by the payment of money. Think of schools, in mest of which the only thing taught is to pronounce the words of a language which neither pupils nor teacher understand. Think of places of public worship, in which nearly all the exercises are performed in an unknown tongue. Think of one half the females in the scantin probability of the state o tongue. Think of one half the females in the country prohibited from going out without courcealing their faces, while both the laws and the religion of the country allow polygamy and concubinage. Think of a country, in which scarce one woman in a hundred can read, and where perhaps not halfahe men are more fortunate.

Think of a country, in which a governor has liberty to behead seven men a day without assigning any reason whatever for so doing, where a criminal is condemned without jury, and 1 had almost said without out jury, and I had almost said without trial or witnesses, and after being condemn hung at the first convenient place in the street, and left hanging two or three days Think of a country in which, in case of public disturbance, one half the community can murder whomsoever they please of the other half with impunity Think of a country, in which an armed man will meet a respectable inoffensive citizen in the street of a populous city at mid day, and shoot him dead on the spot, and then sit down quietly and smoke his pipe in sight of the corpse, while even the guards of the ci-ty are passing by. Think of a country, in which the name of christianity exists but only as a name for that superstition and idolatry, which belongs to Paganism, and in which the delusions of the false Prophet exist with all their impurities and all their abominations Such a country, or rather much worse than even this description is Turkey How different from that country in which it is your happiness to live, and in in which it is your happiness to live, and in which it was my happiness to commence my existence! Americans are generally proud of those privileges, which distinguish them from other nations. Would to God they were all equally zealous to improve as they ought, those privileges. I think a short residence in this country would prepare an American to appreciate more justly privileges enjoyed in his analive land. seems to me as though if I were permitted to live in America again, every privilege would be doubly valuable.

Just before closing this letter, I heard a pistol fired at the door of the house in which I live. On enquiry, I learned that a Turk thad shot a Greek I went to the window, and saw the blood on the stones about 5 feet from the door, at which I had entered 5 to 10 minutes before. The Greek expi red soon after. Such events happen almost daily since the revolt of the Greeks in oth er parts of the Empire, and scarcely any notice is taken of them by the authorities of Congress.

The Russian government haid claim, it appear, ed, to a considerable portion of the ter itory on that coast which belonged to the US in addition to what she held without dispute. will here take leave to remark, that the only thing mortifying to me in the Doctor's Card is, that it furnishes evidence that I have suffered myself heretofore, to have a difference with this contemptible man.

I would warn him that he is accumulating for himself an endly fork of labour, because, it his only do not against such opinions, as I have expressed consists in an attack on the character of others. he will attack on the character of others, he will have to flowe a "diregard of truth, honour and decene" on the part of nine tenths of the Gratlengraph his own county.
