"Bailymoney, Dec 27, 1821.

"Since I wrote last, this country has been greatly disturbed, that is, sevaral counties only, by nightly manaders, attacking houses for arms, and in several instances compared to a serious and other courses. It miting murder, and other outrages. It commenced in the county of Linerick, and from thence spread to Kerry, Ulares and Cork; and in the neighbourhood of Bandon, this last week, set in houses nave been robbed or aims. It is to need to such a length that government at last became alarmed, and sent as much of the became alarmed, and sent as much of the disposable force as they could spare to the south, (but in these days of economy and retrenenment, the army is very much seduced) and sent a special commission from to try such as were in custody; large and to try such as were in custody; large and the earth intension and their; but still it does not seem to have had its proper effect, as they were even going on at that very time with the same outrages. It is hard to say what the same outrages. It is hard to say what they would be at, but certainly as the procuring of arms seems to be their chief ob-

"They say it is not any thing political or religious, but only to get rid or rents, tytics, and taxes, which they are unable to tythes, and taxes, which they are unable to pay on account of low prices, bad harvests, &c. &c. But it they could effect any of these objects by force; their next step is to subvert the government, and they will of course rouse up all their energies to put it down. I believe the Irish administration has been thought rather too lenient on this occasion; and accordingly they are sending over Marquis Wellesiy as Lord Lieutenant, and a new secretary, who it is to be hoped, will adopt such measures as may soon suppress these lawless proceedings. They are something on the plan of the White Boys, in the year 1786, but have proceeded infinitely further in their audacity, & seem to be more systematic. We have not heard as yet of any one of consequence being con-cerned with them, but they could scarcely have proceeded to the length they havedone, without better heads than their own What; without better heads than their own What a meliceboly thing it is that the sine but unfortunate county, can never be quiet, that we must always be involved either in foreign or domestic warm. In this state of things you may suppose money is a very scarce abjele, as those who may be able to pay a-valinemselves of these disturbances to keep But independent of them, we had, in fact, a very had harvest, the wettest ever known and notwithstanding, the prices are very low: wheat, from 13s. to 21s; oats, about 20, and barley, 21s. It has scarcely ceased raining since August; the potatoes are not all out of the ground yet, and scarce-any when sown; so that there is a melan-choly prospect even for the next year. "And I cannot send away thejudges who have fixed on the day—indeed, we should have known to whom it belonged before it was mown." They had some little controversy on the subject, and at last, Gasper said, "I will tell the what thou shalt do: go to morrow to Schwitz: give the judges my reasons and thine, and I shall save the trouble of going mysel." On this agreement Frantz went to plead for and against himself, and drew out the teasons on gainst himself, and drew out the seasons or both sides as well as he could, when the judges had decided, he went to Gasper—the meadow is thine—the sentence is in People the earth with such men, and hapiness will dwell there
