C. HAYDEN, DENTIST,

(Late a Student of Mr. H H Hayden, of Baltimore,)

Respectfully offers his services to the Ladies and Gentlemen of Annapolis, in the line of his profession. In so doing, he forbears entering into a circumstantial detail of the various operations that are occasionally requisite for the preservation of the teeth, or for supplying their deficiencies when lost by premature decay, disease or neglect; suffice it to say, that he performs every necessary operation that may be required in his profession, and in all of which he is regulated (and that with the most scrupulous attention) by the maxims and experience of his preceptor, which have been warranted by more than twenty years practice in the city of Baltimore.

If tenderness and care in the different operations-If beauty & elegance in the finishing and setting natural and artificial teeth and most implicit candourin his advice, are inducements, those who may honour him with their confidence, may be assured of meeting with satisfaction. Any person wishing to be waited on at their residence, will please send a line or servant to his lodgings at Mrs. Robin-

"This will certify, that Mr. C. Hayden, having attended the necessary course of lectures at the University of Maryland, and having studied and practised under my immediate direction and instructions, for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of the profession of a Dentist, is thereby considered fully qualified and competent both in theory and practice, to the va-rious cases that may occur, and as such is recommended to the confi dence and patronage of all such as may in any degree, require professional as-

It is one of the most desirable abodes in Mary. land either for one who derives his support from agricultural pursuits, or a man of fortune who is desirous of obtaining an elegant rural retrest.— The sold is fertile, and abundantly stocked with wood, and is peculiarly well adapted to the culture of Indian Corn and Tobacco, and all the products of a garden. It bears every variety of the best and earliest vegetables, and its proximity to Baltimore, and the convenient water transportstion which its situation affords, give it advantages as a market farm that are possessed by few others. It abounds with delicious grapes, and the choicest grafted fruit trees in full bearing-These have been collected with great care, and are now in the most flourish ing condition. The water by which the place is almost surrounded, and a fish pond that has been made at considerable expense, afford during the summer season, fish and crabs in the utmost abundance; and in the winter the wild fowl which always throng the shores furnish a plentiful supply for the table of the proprietor, and at the same time a very lucrative article of traffic. The farm is well supplied with the ordinary game of the country, Patridges. Pheasants, &c. and there are also on it a few fallow deer. Its situation is truly delightful, It commands a noble view of the Chesapeake on the east; and on the south & west the Magothy river, and the country on the op-posite shore, present a beautiful land-

GENERAL WAYNE. General Wayne is one of many of our re-lutionary heroes, who have been suffered to sleep in their graves unhonoured, and apparently forgotten by their country. The numerous battles in which he fought during purstruggle for independence, attent his courage and his conduct; while the victory of the Miami's, in 1794, added a fresh wreath to his laurels. The next year after this vicding a treaty with the Indians, and was bu-ried on the shore of Lake Erie. No stone nor monument has been erected to his me-mory, and a ruined picket is all that marks mory, and a future product to tell where the hero lies. Permit the muse to present her trifling offering at his grave.

I went to his grave, and saw never a stone, To tell the brave warrior's story, Who 'mongst the sons of his country had shone. Like the star in her diadem's glory. The deeds of his youth, his comrades can tell, When war was wak'd by the cannon's rattle, When he stood by the side of the braves who fell, The first, and the foremost in battle.

The fields of his fame were many and fair, Where he fought with his soldiers around him; And oft, at the close of the conflict of war, The bright garland of victory bound him But now in the wild, far, far in the west,

The brave, gallant warrior is lying,

Just crown'd with victory, he sunk to hi And peace smil'd on his hour of dying. And there, in a lone and desolate grave, By Erie's green waters they laid him, And there he lies, the gallant and brave, Whileno sepulchral honours are paid him.

But the soldier will ever remember his worth,
And treasure with fondness his story; And the gallant will shed a tear on the turf. Where he sleeps in the bed of his glory.

"Calypso ne pouvoit se consoler du de-part d'Ulysse."-Telemacque.

My heart's in the highland, my heart is not here. I spoke the word and so we parted-

I press'd her hand quite broken hearted, And saw no more my bonny belle! Nor will that sorrow soon be o'er, Nor soon the tear be wip'd away-Ev'n now I see her on the shore, And still I curse the joyless day.

No outward sign shall tell that sorrow. No look express my silent grief, --Come, Hope! thou angel of to-morrow! For thou alone canst bring relief. Though far away, my heart shall still

I tremble at the thought of ill-I tremble most, when most I love. l'il think of thee by night and day, l'ach long lost look l'Il treasure well; But joy shall never light my way, Till thou art mine my bonny belie.

Hold fast its ties at each remove-

LOVEST THOU ME? Do I love thee? do I love thee? Yes, and must while ages roll: There is nought to prize above thee, Precious Savrous of the soul!

Do I love theel who has stonger Cause to love the dying Lamb, But for thee had held me longer Sin, that doth mislead to damn! Do I love thee! holy Jesus, Stretch'd upon the mountain tree; Love my rescued spirit seizes, When I feel thou di'dst for me! What for me! a wretched sinner,

With no claim upon his grace?
Re the victim—I the winner,
Through his glorious righteousness!

Do I love thee! thou had at sought me, While in ignorance I stood, Ere I knew thee, thou had'st bought me Bought me with thy streaming blood! Can I, then, do less than love thee, Less than still thy MERCY crave; When there's none in Heaven above thee, None in Heaven, but thou, can save!

AN EMBLEM OF THE RUSURREC-The flowers which we now so much admire, were not long since coarse and shape-less roots; but they are at present the ornaments of the earth; and the delight of our ryes. What a fire image is this of the righte-ous, and the state of their re-animated bodies! The human body, while in the grave, is an object of horror; but it shall experience a most astonishing change at the resource ction. "It was sown in weakness, but shall be raised in power; it was sown in dishonour, but shall be raised in story." The saving no ed in power; it was sown in dishonour, but shall be raised in glory." The spring no sooner takes place of winter, but life and Joy take place of the melancholy impressions which a severe season makes on the mind of man, and the first fine days cause in to forget the gloom of winter. The light of spew creation shall says upon makes and all our sortmers hall upside; and God shall wipe away all tears form our eyes.
