To the Voters of Anne-Arundel County.
 Fellow Citizens, I am induced to offer myself a candidate to represent you in the next assembly of Maryland, under an apprehension that the time is approaching wherein I presume you will not apprehend it necessary for you to query, Is he of this or the other party? but rather is he honest, industrious and qualified? Is he one that doth desire the peace, improvement and prosperity of our country? Feeling conscious that those are my motives, I respectfully solicit your patronage; and if I should prove so successful as to be elected, I would presume that your favour would be more amply repaid by diligently endeavouring according to my capacity, to promote the best interests of my fellow citizens, than by any other, and am with respect your well wisher.

St. John's College.
 The visitors and governors of St. John's College, being desirous to render this institution as extensively useful as may be practicable, and to diffuse the benefits and blessings of education, as far as is in their power, have reduced the price of tuition money to 24 dollars per annum. The visitors and governors feel perfectly justified in recommending to the public, the talents, assiduity, and deportment of the faculty, employed to superintend the instruction of the pupils, as well as the discipline which has been adopted in the institution, and which is faithfully, mildly, but energetically enforced. The visitors have not been unmindful of the accommodation of students coming from a distance; they are fully sensible of the tender solicitude of parents for the morals, the health and domestic comforts of their children, when separated from them; and have made arrangements, whereby students may be boarded in the most respectable families for 120 dollars; making the total expense for tuition and board only 144 dollars per annum. In consequence of the serious losses heretofore sustained by the institution from the failure of pupils to pay for their education, the visitors have deemed it expedient for sometime past, that the tuition money be paid quarterly in advance, and no pupil can be received into the College, without a compliance with this rule—a rule which most other public seminaries have found it necessary to adopt. The visitors and governors avail themselves of this occasion, to assure the public, that their endeavours to render St. John's College a blessing to the community, and an ornament to the state, shall be steady and unremitted; and they feel an honest conviction, that under the steady and energetic system pursued, St. John's will once more stand proudly, amongst the foremost literary institutions of the land, again resume its ancient reputation and dignity, become the nursery of valuable citizens for the commonwealth, and rear up from the rising generations, ornaments to their families, their college, and their country.

LEWIS DUVAL,
 Jan. 15.

THE FROLICKSOME DUKE.
 The late Duke of Montague was remarkable for achievements of wit and humour, which he conducted with a dexterity and address peculiar to himself. In one of his rambles he observed that a middle aged man in something like a military dress, of which the face was much tarnished and the cloth worn threadbare, appeared at a certain hour in the Park, walking to and fro in the mall with a kind of mournful solemnity, or ruminating by himself on one of the benches, without taking any more notice of the gay crowd that was moving about him, than of so many emmits on an ant-hill, or atoms dancing in the sun.
 This man the Duke singled out as a fit subject for a frolic. He began, therefore, by making some enquiry concerning him, and soon learned that he was an unfortunate poor creature, who, having laid out his whole stock of money in the purchase of a commission, had behaved with great bravery in the war, in hopes of preferment, but upon the conclusion of peace had been reduced to starve upon half pay. This the Duke thought a favourable circumstance for his purpose; but he learned upon further enquiry, that the captain, having a wife and several children, had been reduced to the necessity of sending them to Yorkshire, whither he constantly remitted them one moiety of his half pay, which would not subsist them nearer the metropolis, and reserved the other moiety to keep himself upon the spot where alone he could look for an opportunity of obtaining a more advantageous situation. These particulars afforded new scope for the Duke's genius, and he immediately began his operations.

After sometime, when every thing had been prepared, he watched an opportunity as the captain was sitting alone, buried in his speculations, on a bench, to send his gentleman to him with his compliments and an invitation to dinner the next day. The Duke having placed himself at a considerable distance, saw his messenger approach without being perceived, and began to speak without being heard; he saw his intended guest start at length from his reverie like a man frightened out of a dream, and gaze with a foolish look of wonder and perplexity at the person who accosted him, without seeming to comprehend what he said, or believe his senses, when it was repeated to him till he did. In short, he saw with infinite satisfaction all that could be expected in the looks, behaviour, and attitude of a man, addressed in so abrupt and unaccountable a manner; and as the sport depended upon the man's sensibility, he discovered so much of that quality of striking the first stroke, that he promised himself success beyond his former hopes. He was told, however, that the captain returned thanks for the honour intended him, and would wait on his Grace at the time appointed.

When he came, the Duke received him with particular marks of civility; and taking him aside with an air of great secrecy and importance, told him that he had desired the favour of his company to dine, chiefly on account of a lady, who had long had a particular regard for him, and had expressed a great desire to be in his company, which her situation made it impossible for her to accomplish without the assistance of a friend; that having learned these particulars by accident, he had taken the liberty of bringing them together; & added that he thought such an act of civility, whatever might be the opinion of the world, could be no imputation upon his honour. During this discourse, the Duke enjoyed the profound astonishment & various changes of confusion that appeared in the captain's face, who, after he had a little recovered himself, began a speech with great solemnity, in which the Duke perceived he was laboring to insinuate in the best manner, that he doubted whether he was not imposed upon, and whether he ought not to resent it; and therefore put an end to his difficulties at once. The Duke laid his hand on his breast and devoutly swore that he told him nothing which he did not believe, upon good evidence to be true.

 When word was brought that dinner was served, the captain entered the dinner room with great curiosity and wonder, but his wonder was unspeakably increased, when he saw at the table his own wife and children. The Duke had begun his frolic by sending for them out of Yorkshire, and had as much if not more astonished the lady than he had her husband, to whom he took care that she should have no opportunity to send a letter.
 It is much more easy to conceive than to describe a meeting so sudden & extraordinary; it is sufficient to say, that it afforded the highest entertainment to the duke, who, at length, with much difficulty, got his guests quietly seated at the table, and persuaded them to fall to, without thinking of yesterday or to-morrow. It happened that soon after dinner was over, word was brought to the duke, that his lawyer attended about some business of his grace's order.—The Duke, willing to have a short truce with the various enquiries of the captain about his family, ordered the lawyer to be introduced, who, pulling out a deed that the Duke was to sign, was directed to read it, with an apology to the company for the interruption. The lawyer accordingly began to read, when, to complete the adventure, and the confusion and astonishment of the captain and his wife, the deed appeared to be a settlement, which the Duke had made upon them of a genteel sufficiency for life. Having gravely heard the instrument read, he signed and sealed it, and delivered it into the captain's hand, desiring him to accept it without compliments, "for," said he, "I assure you it is the last thing I could have employed my money or my time more to my satisfaction in any other way."

TRAITS OF CHARACTER.
 The following facts, though otherwise of little importance, are characteristic of the very different spirit of Bonaparte and the Bourbons in the city of Lyons, during the troubles of the French revolution, ninety-four religious houses, churches and chapels, besides some other buildings, were demolished. To repair the injury thus done to the place, various sums were expended by the government in promoting improvements, of which the following is a catalogue:—Under the Republic & Bonaparte, there were formed or built three public walks planted with trees, a nursery a botanic garden, a flower market, a veterinary school, a museum of paintings and antiquities, four new bridges; the court of justice was enlarged; there were erected a prefect's hotel, casino, a new theatre, and hospital, a new square, new quays on the Rhone and the Saone, and the ruined parish churches were restored. To Louis the Restorer, since 1814, the inhabitants are indebted for, 1st, three new squares; 2nd, the re-establishment of an old convent; 3rd, the foundation of a new central seminary for the brethren of christian doctrine; 4th, now become the chief instructors of youth all over France.
 Whilst General La Fayette was receiving visits at New York, an elderly Carman in his frock, applied for admittance, and was refused. He declared he would not go away without speaking to the General, and at length got into the room. Waiting a favourable moment, he went up to the General, and opening the breast of his frock, asked if he knew him. The General, recognizing him, called him by name, and extending his hand, said, "Yes, you assisted me in the field of battle, when wounded."
