Valuable Real Estate FOR SALE.

By virtue of a decree of the Court of Chancery of Maryland, the subscriber will, at 12 o'clock on Thursday the 3th of November instant, (if fair, and if not, on the first fair day thereafter), sell at public sale on the premises, to the highest bidder, the real estate of the late George Hogarth Esq. being about 800 acres of valuable land in Anne Arundel county, situated upon Herring Bay, about 20 miles from Annapolis, 50 from Baltimore, and adjoining the village of Friendship.

It has the advantage of an excellent landing, whence the greater part of the produce of Calvert county and of the lower parts of Anne Arundel, is shipped for the Baltimore market, and from which, two packets run regularly twice a week. The land is of excellent quality, is well adapted to the growth of fine tobacco, grain and clover, and plaster is said to set upon it with great effect. It abounds with valuable timber of every description, which may be cut and conveyed to the landing with great facility by very convenient roads made at great expense with a view to that object.

The land will be sold entire, if any one or more disposed to purchase at a fair price express a wish to do so before or on the day of sale. In the meantime for the accommodation of bidders, if none should wish to buy the whole, it will be divided into three lots, two of about 300 each, and one of about 200 acres.

Lot No. 1,

Will bind immediately on Herring Bay, and contain, besides several small improvements, the following valuable improvements, viz a warehouse, dwelling house, and kitchen, contiguous to the landing at the cove, on a lot which offers great advantages for a Lumber Yard—an excellent dwelling desirably situated, having six rooms on the same floor, including a very commodious kitchen, the whole surrounded by a Portico, a very large, new and substantial tobacco house of sound and durable materials, upwards of 70 feet long, and about 40 feet wide, including the shed; there are also one or more quarters on this lot, and other out houses in good order.

Lot No. 2,

Will have on it a small tenement of one story, which will answer for a temporary dwelling, a large, new and substantial tobacco house, in excellent preservation, and several comfortable quarters.

Lot No. 3,

Is nearly covered with valuable timber, has on it, one or more useful tenements, and immediately adjoins the town of Friendship. Both

Lots No. 1 & 2,

Have on them several extensive flats or bottoms, some of them partially cleared and improved, and all of which with little trouble or expense may be converted into excellent meadows.

The Terms of Sale are—
 One fourth cash on the day of sale, or of the ratification thereof by the chancellor, and the residue by equal instalments, in six, twelve and eighteen months, bearing interest from the day of sale, and to be secured by bond with good securities—and on the ratification of the sale and payment of the whole purchase money, the land is directed to be conveyed by

LEWIS NETH, Jr. Trustee.
 Sw.
 The editors of the National Intelligencer, American and Family Gazette, will publish the above once a week for three weeks, and forward their accounts to this office for collection.

Chancery Sale.

By virtue of a decree of the Court of Chancery, the subscriber will expose to public sale, on the premises, on Tuesday the 23d day of November next, if fair, if not the next fair day thereafter, lying on which Benjamin Hancock residet, lying on the Budkin Neck, and containing two hundred and ninety-seven acres its demised unnecessary to give a full and particular description of this property, as it is presumed those willing to purchase will view it previous to the day of sale. The improvements consist of a comfortable framed dwelling-house, and all other necessary out houses. The terms of sale are, that the purchaser or purchasers shall give bond, with security, for the payment of the purchase money, with interest from the day of sale, at six and twelve months. On payment of the purchase money, the subscriber is authorized to convey to the purchaser or purchasers the said property free, clear, and discharged from all claim of the Complainant or Defendant. Sale to commence at 12 o'clock.

From the Trenton Emporium.—THE VETERAN VILLAGER.

Some distance beyond the Susquehanna, in a little valley among the mountains, a village distinguished for the beauty of its long row of white-washed cottages, and its neat red church, shaded by a cluster of towering button woods, in the centre, often attracts the attention of the traveller, and wins him from the toil of his journey to wile away a few delightful hours, at its peaceful house of entertainment. I used often to ride over to Redwood, from the river, in the days when old Warlock lived in the cottage by the bridge, to hear him tell the marvellous tales which were connected with the early settlement of the place, when the Indian power was unbroken, and every day brought perils to the doors of the cottagers.

The Colonel was every one's oracle in these matters, for he was not only the last of the hardy original settlers, that remained, but had always held the post of commandant from the day he came to that spot. He was, literally the father of the village, for he not only assisted in setting up the first pole that was erected at the place, but had defended it through twenty battles and at the expense of nearly as many wounds. Besides his military standing, he had also enjoyed the confidence of the fathers of the present villagers, as well as of themselves, in many civil trusts, and, excepting the office of magistrate which had been held by the O'Quill's, "from time immemorial," and had latterly descended to one of their clerks, he had risen in civil affairs, to the highest posts of honour, the village afforded.

In small well ordered communities like this, it often happens that the people make their own magistrate, inasmuch as the Governor appoints the man who is recommended by the majority of voices. It had always been so at Redwood—and one day when, as usual I had gone over there, I found the good people all collected at the tavern, discussing the matter of appointing another magistrate, the office being about to become vacant, and among the candidates I found the two most conspicuous were the old village veteran, Col. Warlock, and the clerk of the present occupant, a little man, nearly bald, with a face quite formal and destitute of expression; his eyes running with water, fingers stained with ink; and wearing a striped searsucker coat, and white trousers.

That a contest could last a moment between two such men in the village where they were both known, appeared to me very extraordinary, inasmuch as, at first glance, it seemed the weight of services were so much in favour of the Colonel; but I found as soon as I came to mix with the multitude that they kept the scale balancing by dint of throwing constantly in the Quillman's side, a most ponderous weight of words—For, the little man in searsucker, had employed the two school-masters, the village clerk and nearly all the writing and talking people to advocate his cause, praise him and his qualifications to the skies, and abuse and detract from the merits and ability of his opponent—these were enough to talk all the honest, sensible men of the village out of countenance, and they would have done it, had it not been for the peculiarly hard and difficult case they had in hand.

They proved pretty clearly and conclusively that Mr. Quill wrote the best hand, and it was supposed by them, though they had no evidence of that fact, that he surpassed the Colonel in the art of letter writing, which they insisted was a high accomplishment for a magistrate—but when it was answered on the other hand, that true devotion to the welfare of the village and a sound judgment were a hundred times more important, and that in these, old Warlock, was decidedly superior to his competitor, they were silent. But they said again that Mr. Quill having been clerk to the old squire, a long time, knew all the intricacies about the business—they could not, however, answer the objection, that that rule of choosing would always give the old magistrate the power of appointing his successor, because they all wanted to be thought republicans.

But then again, they said that Mr. Quill had several times been sent abroad to other villages on the common business of the people, and therefore was better qualified for business, than the Col. who had spent all his time at home, looking into the home business of the town, and keeping every thing straight—The people, however, shook their heads; they remembered they said, that those journeys had cost a pretty round sum of their money, and besides, that Mr. Quill had brought some bad habits back with him, that did not argue much in his favour. And besides all the rest, the sober people said he was rather a proud, passionate, overbearing sort of a man, and not exactly honest in all matters.

Indeed the qualifications and merits of Mr. Quill appeared of so dubious a kind that he could not have stood up a moment in opposition to the Colonel, had it not been for the back edge of the weapons used by his friends—They assuited the old veteran in every quarter—acknowledging that he had been one of the fathers of the village, its early and its late defender—that his services had been of infinite value; they strove to lessen his fame, and stigmatise his character by every species of ungrateful slander. They even took exceptions to his name, which they insisted smelled too much of gunpowder, and objected to the manner in which he had performed some of his most signal exploits, as if it was enough that in every danger he had stood foremost for his country—that his naked breast had always been found between the enemy and them—that he had bled that they might have the privilege of exercising the right of freemen that day. I rode away from the scene, cursing the blindness and ingratitude of man.

But when I returned home through the village in the evening, a great bon-fire was blazing before the old veteran's door. The crowd of villagers were dispersed in groups along the street—Joy and hilarity prevailed every where, and when I enquired the cause, I learned old Warlock had a majority of the names—the magistracy of Redwood was decided.

I have often thought of the circumstance since—because I have seen new editions of the same scene pass before me fifty times, not. I am sorry to say it, not always with the same result. It too often happens in our country, that honest sterling merit is passed by, while intrigue and cunning sit in the high places of the land; may the people say—It shall be so no longer.

Indian Cure for the Ear Ache,

Take a piece of the lean of mutton, about the size of a large walnut, put it into the fire, and burn it for sometime, till it becomes almost reduced to a cinder; then put it into a piece of clean rag, and squeeze it until some moisture is expressed, which must be dropped in the ear as hot as the patient can bear it.
