Runaway on the 29th October last, from the farm of Judge Johns, on West River, a Negro fellow by the name of HARRY AYRES, about five feet seven or eight inches high; when spoken to assumes an impudent look, but when closely questioned his countenance changes to the other extreme. Had on when he absconded, a PEA COAT, and pair of yellow domestic trousers about half worn; he also took with him a suit of blue domestic, and a mixed summer coat. He will doubtless obtain other clothing. He is of delicate frame, and has no visible scars that are recollected. A reward of fifty dollars will be given if taken in the state, and the above reward if taken out of the state. It is probable that he may attempt to get to the state of Delaware, having a brother residing there with his master.

The second drawing will take place on Wednesday next, the 24th inst. and WILL BE CONTINUED every week until further notice. This Lottery, whether viewed in point of the splendour of its capital prizes, or the number which are floating, is undoubtedly superior to any other now drawing in the United States, as will be acknowledged from the following summary, viz:

1 prize of 40,000 DOLLARS
1 do 20,000 DOLLARS
1 do 10,000 DOLLARS
2 of 5000, 28 of 1000, 18 of 500, 50 of 100, 96 of 50, 4808 of 10.

The above list of prizes are still undrawn and all but four are floating from the commencement, and as the prizes only will be drawn, most auspicious prospects are presented to early adventurers.

On the opening of the wheels on Wednesday the 24th inst. the price of tickets will be advanced to $12, and from the unusual demand for tickets and the proposed rapidity of the drawing, the price will probably be still farther advanced, of which due notice will be given—Until which time tickets and shares in a great variety of numbers may be had for the following low rates, viz:

Whole $10 | Quarters $2 50
Half 5 | Eighths 1 25

by applying at CONINE'S FORTUNE'S HOME,

HOW TO GET OUT.

Our readers will probably recollect a humorous anecdote, in verse, entitled Marks and Remarks, which was published in this paper two or three years since. The following is another anecdote of the same eccentric, though, it is said, worthy and excellent divine, who was the subject of that story, the Rev. Emanuel Glebe, and may afford some amusement to the lovers of eccentricity. Having a few summers ago determined to make a tour, he took leave of his flock, over whose souls his care was extended, with more than ordinary feelings of good will; but, as he was what the world calls "a good liver," he extended his care likewise over that generous and inspiring beverage which promotes "the feast of reason and the flow of soul; in short, he possessed a cellar well stored with the true Falernian. This store must be allowed to have naturally demanded his attention before he left home, and its security in his absence was what every man of common care would have endeavoured to promote as far as possible.

With this intention, therefore, the Doctor rang his bell, and his faithful servant John immediately stood before him; then taking out of his purse a half crown, he said, "here, John take this, go to the blacksmith's in the village, and buy with it three ten-penny nails immediately." John, delighted with his errand, immediately repairs to the habitation of this disciple of Vulcan, and, paying him for the three nails, quietly profits by his master's idea of the number of ten-penny nails to be had for two shillings & sixpence, by pocketing the difference, and then, crowding all sail, appears again in his master's presence—"Very well, Sir," says the Doctor, "now bring me a candle and a hammer, and go with me in the wine cellar, to nail up the door." Picture to yourself now the worthy Doctor and John, in the subterranean vaults, consulting the safety of the choice spirits there immured. "Give me the candle, John, shut the door, and drive a nail in here at the top," John hampered. "Hit it hard, John, drive it up to the head."

"I have, Sir." "Now drive another in here above the lock, John." "Yes, Sir." "Up to the head, John." "I will, Sir." "Now the third here, a little way from the bottom, John." "Yes, Sir." This being accomplished, both paused to view the work, when the Doctor exclaimed with exultation, "Now, John, I think we have done the business cleverly; you don't think any body can manage to get in now, John, do you?" (John, however, it seems, during the pause at the conclusion of driving the nails, had reflected that he was on the wrong side of the door to run away, and nailed himself and his master up in the cellar along with the wine, in their anxiety to prevent others from getting in. He therefore very ironically observed, in answer to this question)—"No, Sir, I am afraid nobody can get in, but how are we to get out?" Conviction then first flashed upon the Doctor's mind, and, being considerably annoyed at his situation, he replied with warmth, "You stupid fellow, John, why, why, why did you not tell me at first, John, you great fool John; shout, shout, John. Oh dear, we are fast! shout, and raise the house, John; the servants must get assistance, and break the door down." How the worthy Doctor and John were liberated from the cellar we have never heard.

Let scandal alone and it will die of itself; oppose it, and it will spread the faster.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.

From the National Intelligencer. REPORT FROM THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

The Central Committee of the Convention of Delegates from the States of Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, who assembled at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, on the 6th of November, 1823, have delayed until now any public communication of their proceedings to the members of the Convention.

To obviate unfounded impressions, they deem it expedient to state, that soon after the meeting of congress in Dec- last, the memorials ordered to be presented, in behalf of the convention, to the legislatures of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, were received by the Central Committee from the several committees appointed to prepare them, and forwarded to their proper destination. At the same time, a correspondence was begun, and afterwards maintained, between the Central Committee and the friends of the common enterprise in those Legislatures until their adjournment.

Every effort was made to promote despatch in obtaining the contemplated charter. A bill, in accordance with the resolutions of the Convention, was prepared by the Central Committee, and separate copies of it forwarded to Richmond and Annapolis before the end of the year.

Efforts were also made to impress upon the friends of the contemplated Canal, in both Legislatures, the importance of preserving exact uniformity in their amendments of the bill, if any should be required. The bill was designed to create a new Company, and it was expected that the copy of it which first received a legislative sanction would become the basis of the charter, and be definitively ratified by the assent of the other States, of Congress, and of the existing Potomac Company.

The bill which was forwarded to the General Assemblies of Maryland and Virginia was adapted, by its terms, to this mode of ratification, after receiving the sanction of either Legislature.

The Virginia act passed both branches of the Legislature as early as the 27th of January last, though not without considerable opposition in the House of Delegates, where an apprehension existed, warranted neither by the language nor the purport of the bill, that it recognized the authority of Congress to cut a canal through the territory of a State, or maintained, in some mode or other, the disputed doctrine, that the federal government has the constitutional power of instituting a system of Internal Improvement.

To obviate this unfounded objection, the friends of the bill inserted the 23d section, which regarded in the most unfavourable light by the advocates of this power, was but surplusage, since no subscription of money was asked, by the bill, of either of the States, or of Congress; and the consent of the latter was invited solely because the intended Canal would pass through the District of Columbia, over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction.

Before the Virginia bill had reached the Senate of that State, the Maryland Legislature had made some progress in that which had been forwarded to Annapolis. It had received several amendments, which were made known at Richmond by the Central Committee, and were immediately incorporated in the Virginia bill. As soon as this bill had received the sanction of the Senate of Virginia, an ad-
