SKETCHES OF INDIA. By the author of "Recollections of the Peninsula."

The following is the conclusion of an excellent picture of Calcutta]. As the evening closes in, the

the glare of torches in all directions, lighting the coaches and palanquins, hurrying along to the splendid entertainments, of which there is a constant succession among the opulent and luxurious inhabitants of Calcutta. At twelve you may see them returning home: and if the oppressive heat drives you, as it often does, to the roof or balcony of your house for air, soon after, when all is dark and silent round you, the cry of jackalls, suddenly and wildly breaking forth, then ceasing, then again nearer or close to you, may be distinctly heard. You are then reminded that this city is the quick growth of a century—that where they are, it is still half jungle; that at Chowringhee, where you now stand in a spacious verandah, supported by lofty Grecian pillars, only sixty short years ago the defenceless villagers could scarce bar out the prowling tiger; and that, were this city to become suddenly depopula, ted, in sixty more these perishable palaces of timber, brick, and chunam, would totally disappear, and rank vegetation conceal the very ground they stand upon! Such a fate, however is not to be apprehended for Calcutta. Long after our interest in it as Englishmen, may have ceased by the entire loss of our Indian possessions as governors, it will continue a populous, powerful, and wealthy City. Although we do not admit of colonization in India, a class of natives connected with us by blood, language, habit, education, and religion, is rapidly growing into consequence, in point of numbers, possessions, awakened desires; enlarged and enlightened views. They are all the small merare shut out from the service of the Company; but that they are the sub-jects of the company, must never be forgotten. The British blood and the native blood in their veins are alike hateful to them; for the Englishman and the Hindoo alike disclaim them; but as the light of of a few shoft years will fearfully increase their numbers; and if the moral and mental improvement of this class, now reckoning in it many ECHOS. There are several cohos in the highlands, which, from their powers and the number of times which they repeat, have attracted much attention among the curious. From the spot where the artiflery is usually planted at West Point, we have often counted five listinct reverberations on the discharge of a fieldpiece; and the celebrated echo below the Point, near the site of old Fort Washington, repeats nine times. One of the most distant eches that we ever heard is upon the east side of the Otsego lake, occasioned by the pecultar conformation of the mountain celebrated in Guoper's nevel, "The will, and gave away all his instant to lunatic; frantic, and mad public to lunatic; frantic, and mad public ration is distinct, yet so distinct, that a whole sentence of ordinary length culiar conformation of the mountain lis repeated; and the effect of a band of music of a tranquil evening, upon the bosom of the lake, is very fine, as it appears like two bands at different points playing the same air at the same time. In the days of eauld lang syne,' it was a favourite amusecrowds of carriages disperse; and, about half an hour after you see ment of the villagers, with their wives and sweethearts, to enjoy a double banquet of music in this way, upon the lake of a moonlight evening. But neither of these echos bear any comparison with one in the neighbourhood of Milan. This echo as we are informed, has been counted to repeat the report eighty-five times. And what renders the peculiarity still greater, is the fact, that some words in the same sentence are repeated stronger than others, and do not always regularly and gradually diminish and die away. This echo had interested Buonaparto very much; no went several times, and used to discharge two pistols at once, and always exclaimed that it was the most extraordinary thing he ever heard. N. Y. A FATAL MISTAKE.

The late Col. Campbell, of Glenyon, was grandson of the Laild of Glenlyon, who commanded the military at the massacre of Glenco, and who lived in the Laird of Glenco's house, where he and his men were hospitably received as friends, and entertained a fortnight before the execution of his orders. He was playing at cards with the family when the first shot was fired, and the murderous scene commenced. Col. Campbell entertained the belief, then universal in the highlands, that punishment of the cruelty, oppresion or misconduct of an individual descended as a curse on his children to the third and fourth generation. In 1711, he was ordered to super-intend the execution of the sentenco of a court martial on a soldier condemned to be shot. A reprieve was sent, but the whole ceremony of the execution was to proceed until the criminal was upon his knees, with a cap over his eyes, prepared to recive the volley. It was then he was to be informed of his pardon. No person was to be told previously, and Colonel Campbell was directed not to inform even the firing party, who were warned that the signal to fire would be the waving of a white knowledge beams on them, they see handkerchief by the commanding and on which is a thriving young apple orchard, with other well selected fruit-trees, and near to which are se on his knees in momentary expectation of b's fate, and the firing party were looking with intense attention for the signal, Colonel Campbell men of talent, integrity, and picty, put his hand in his pocket for the keeps pace with that increase we must not expect nor ought with packet the white handkerchief acwish, that they should look upon companied it, and catching the eyes packet the white handkerchief acof the party, they fired and the unthemselves as outcasts, without a country they dare call their own; fortunate prisoner was shot dead. The paper dropped through Col. Campbell's fingers, and clapping without the common privileges of free born ment without eligibility to honour, wealth or usofulness; or to his hands to his forchead, he exclaiany share in the government of med, "The curse of God and of Glenco is here; I am an unfortunato ruined man." He desired the soldiers to be sent to the barracks, instantly quitted the parade, and soon afterwards retired from the service.
