TRAVELS IN COLOMBIA.

From the North American Review. Journal of a residence and travels in Colombia, during the years 1823 and 1824. By Capt. Charles Stuart Cochrane, of the Royal Navy, 2 Vols. 8vo. London, 1824.

Within the short period of fifteen years, all Spanish America has shaken off the chains of servitude, and new and independent governments have been established. The countries which have respectively instituted separate governments of their own, are Mexico, Guatemala, Colombia, Peru, Chili and Buenos Ayres. Nature seems to have marked out these divisions, and it is most likely that they will for the present at least remain fixed. Brazil enjoys a sort of anomalous independence, having dissolved its connexion with the old monarchy of Portugal, and set up a government of its own, under a constitution, and the new emperor Don Pedro, who, in his proclamation to the Brazilians published a year ago, bravely bid defiance to the "Jacobinical and Machiavellian Cortes of Portugal."

This is of course a temporary state of things. The atmosphere of America is not one which can ever be breathed freely by kings and emperors; crowns will not sit lightly here; and the fate of Iturbide should be a warning to all who are ambitious of so hazardous a distinction. The experiment of the last fifteen years, which was begun indeed fifty years ago by the United States, has solved to a demonstration, the great problem in politics respecting the capability of men in a given state of society to govern themselves. Aboof from the governments of the old world, and too remote to be encumbered and crushed by the officious aid of a Holy Alliance, or a jealous neighbour, the South Americans have fought their way to independence; and notwithstanding they were just emerging from a state of pupillage and degradation, so feelingly described by Bolivar, in his excellent speech at the opening of the congress of Cucuta, they have nevertheless shown themselves adequate to every exigency. Wisdom has prevailed in their deliberations, and they have been firm, and persevering in action.—Reverses have only roused them to new and more vigorous efforts, and experience has taught them lessons by which they have not disdained to be instructed and guided.

The Republic of Colombia is composed of the countries formerly known as the captain-generalcy of Venezuela, and the viceroyalty of New Grenada. Its extent from the mouth of the Oronoco, to the western extremity of Panama, in a direct line, is somewhat more than 1500 miles; and from Cape Vela to the North, to the southern limits of Quito on the South, it is about 1100 miles. By an estimate founded on Humboldt's Astronomical Observations, Venezuela contained 48,000 square leagues, and New Grenada, including Quito, 66,000. According to this estimate, the present superficies of Colombia, exclusive of Panama, is 1,017,000 square miles, being twelve times larger than the Island of Great Britain, and about the dimensions of the whole territory east of the Mississippi. It is bounded on the north and east by the Carribean sea and the Atlantic ocean, on the south by the Brazil and Peru, and on the west by the Pacific and the new republic of Guatemala. Reckoning from the mouth of the Oronoco to the isthmus of Darien on the Atlantic side, and from Panama to the borders of Peru on the Pacific, it will be found that Colombia has a sea coast of little less than three thousand miles in extent. When we consider the central position of this country, in regard to the other parts of the American continent, and also of Europe and Asia; when we take into view its geographical features, its large and numerous rivers, its varied soil and climate, its mountains, and forests, and luxuriant valleys, its products and natural resources, its pearl fisheries and rich mines; when we look at these immense advantages, enjoyed under a free government, suited to convert them all to their proper ends, and to insure a perpetually increasing prosperity, we cannot but be impressed with the gran-
