THE WOODEN LEG.
A young Shepherd was tending his goats on the mountain, when the Rantistreamlet gushes into the valley. His pastoral reed awakened the seven fold echo among the rocks, and sounded cheerfully thro' the valley. Looking around, he saw a man come up the mountain—he was old and silvery was his hair.
The man advanced slowly, leaning on his staff (for he had a wooden leg) and sat down by his side on a mossy rock.—The young Shepherd looked at him with astonishment, and surveyed his wooden leg.
Young man, said the stranger, laughing, surely thou thinkest that I ought to have staid in the valley? I perform this journey from the valley once every year.
This leg, though a wooden one, is more honorable to me, than to many are two sound limbs. Father, replied the shepherd, it may be honourable to thee; but I would lay any thing, that two sound limbs are more convenient. Thou must be tired. If thou choosest, I'll give thee some fresh goat's milk, or fetch a cool draught from you rill which purls out of the rock.
Old Man. Thou art a good lad —a draught of cool water, would refresh me. If thou wilt fetch it, I will relate to thee the history of my wooden leg.
The young shepherd flew to the rill, and soon returned with a refreshing draught. The old man having drank the cooling beverage, began—Young men ought to thank God that many of your fathers are covered with scars and mutilated.
You would cheerlessly hang your heads, instead of basking in the sun and rousing the echo. Mirth and joy resound now through the valley, and cheerful songs are heard in our mountains—liberty, sweet liberty, blesses the whole country.
Mountains and valleys, are far as our eyes can reach, are ours—we cheerfully cultivate our property, and what we gather we earn, shouting with joy, for our own use.

Shepherd. A man that could forget that these are the fruits the battles fought by our fathers, would not deserve being a free man.
Old man. No would he my son, who would not do the same. Since that bloody day, I have gone once every year from the valley up to this eminence, but I am sensible this will be my last journey. From here I can see the whole order of the battle in which we gained our liberty.
Look, yonder did the hostile bands break forth; numerous spears glittered betwixt the trees, and we beheld at least two hundred horsemen in a splendid armour. Our small bands were already broken; our force consisted only of a few hundred.—Lamentations filled the air around, and the smoke of the burning Nafels covered the valley, and crept dreadfully up the mountains.
But now our captain stood at the foot of the mountain; yonder, where two fir-trees stand upon the rock; there he stood only surrounded by a few. Methinks I still see him stand there; collecting the scattered bands, raising the banner high aloft, that it rustled like wind preceding a thunder storm; the scattered warriors gathered around him from all parts. Dost thou see those hills yonder purling down the rock?
Through cliffs and upturned trees oppose them, look, they force their way through, continue their course, and meet in that lake: thus was it, thus flew the scattered bands to join our banner, and penetrated, fighting, through the enemy's ranks—stood round the hero and swore—though our troop is small, if God assist us we will conquer or die!

*The battle of Nafels, in the year 1359, of men!

The enemy bore down upon us in close battle array.
We attacked him eleven times, and then retreated to the protecting mountain. We maintained our ground, a close phalanx, impenetrable like that rock behind us. But now having been reinforced by thirty heroes from Switz, we rushed upon the enemy, as a falling mountain, or as a rock split to its base, rolls down into a forest shivering the lofty trees. The enemies before and around us, on horse and on foot, mingled in dreadful disorder, brought each other to the ground, while they gave way to our fury. Thus raged our bands among the enemy, advancing over heaps of slain and crippled warriors, to spread farther death and destruction. I was one of them; but in the wild confusion, a hostile horseman threw me down and his steed broke my leg. One of my comrades saw me fall; he took me on his shoulder, and carried me from the field of battle. A pious monk, within a short distance, upon the top of a rock, was praying to God, to grant us victory. "Reverend father, take care of my comrade; he has fought like a man!" He spoke it, and flew back to the field of battle. We gained it. Many of our people, I was afterwards told, were stretched out upon heaps of slain enemies, as the tired mower rests upon the sheaf cut by himself.
I was carefully nursed, and cured; but do not know who was my preserver; I have never had an opportunity of thanking him for having saved my life. In vain performed ed vows and pilgrimage, hoping that some angel or saint would reveal his name to me. But to no purpose! I shall not be able to thank him on his side the grave.
The young man had listened with tears in his eyes to the crippled veteran, and now said: Father thou canst not thank him in this world.
What dost thou say? exclaimed the old man, with surprise: Dost thou then know who he was?
Shepherd. I should be very much mistaken if he was not my own father. He has frequently related to me the history of the battle, and always added; I wonder whether that man who fought so bravely by my side, and whom I carried off the field of battle, be still living?
Old Man. Oh God and ye saints! should he really have been your father?
Shepherd. He had a scar here (pointing at his left cheek); he had been wounded by the splinter of a spear, before he carried thee from the field of battle.
Old man. His left cheek bled, when he carried me away. Oh, my child, my son!
Shepherd. He died two years ago; and now I tend these goats for hire; for he was poor.
The old man clasped him to his heart. God be praised! I then have it my power to discharge my debt to thee.—Come, my son, come to my cottage, another lad may tend these goats. They went into the valley to his cottage. He was rich in fields and flocks, and a charming daughter was his sole heress. Child, said he, the man who saved my life was the father of this lad. If thou couldst love him, I would make thee his wife. The lad was handsome and lively; auburn locks shaded his face, and flaming through modest eyes, sparkled through the copious ringlets depending from his brow. The maid took three days to consider, but on the third could conceal her love no longer. She bestowed her hand on the youth, and the old man wept tears of joy, and said: God bless you both! Now I am the happiest of men!
