London, Oct. 10. A letter from Alexandria, of the 12th of Sept. gives the following particulars of a daring attempt to burn the Turkish fleet, lying in that port:—

On the 29th of last month, at four in the afternoon, four small vessels, bearing a European flag. appeared in sight of the Port; the fourth remained tacking off and on. The pilots as usual, went out to bring them into the roads. At half past 5 the first entered, and soon after the seconds The Captain of the Port arrived to take the usual dues. It was then perceived that the first of these strange vessels was endeavouring to penetrate between the Turkish ships of war, and as a long scampania was perceived at the same time alongside, some suspicion arose that it might be a fire ship. It was ordered to stop, but the captain still advanced, and would probably have succeeded, but for a sudden change of the wind. Thus finding himself discovered, he set fire to his vessel, and abandoned it. The whole erow got into the scampania, and by dint of towing got out of the port, The second seeing this, tacked about, and followed the scampania. Seven cannon shot were fired at the second ship; three others were fired at it by a French man of war, but without doing it any injury. The third, being abandoned, was towed off and blew up.
