BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH Of the late Com. Thomas M'Donough. Captain Thomas Macdonough was the son of an eminent physician of the ume name, who resided in the county the Castle, in the state of Dela-ware. He was appointed a Major in the Revolutionary army, in 1775, but retired early from the service. After the peace he held several responsible offices, and died in 1796. He had several children, among whom were three sons. The eldest James, was a midshipman under Commodore Truxton, when he took the Insurgent, in which action he was so severely wounded as to be obliged to have a leg amputated, and leave the service. After the death of his father, the lamented subject of this article obtained a midshipman's warrant, and commenced his career with many other gallant young men, all ardently desiring an opportunity to distinguish themselves. He accompanied our little fleet to the Mediterranean, and was frequently engaged in the conflicts which tested the relative prowess of Christians and Mahometans, in the Tripolitan war. Though at this time grave, reserved, and circumspect in a remarkable de-gree, we are told (by the Analectic Marazine) he was then remarkable for a daring impetuosity, an invincible chivalrous sort of perseverance in every sort of adventure. In 1806 he was first Lieutenant of the Siren, then lying in the harbour of Gibraltar, under the late Cap. John Smith. While here, young Macdonough signalized himself in the absence of the Capt, who was on shore, by rescione a harmonic and a who was in eving an American seaman who was impressed from one of our merchantmen, lying near the Siren. Macdonough, the boat of the British frigate. The Captin of the British frigate. The Captin of the friends went on heard of tain of the frigate went on board of the Siren, in a great rage, to de-mind how he dared to take a man from one of his majesty's boats? And invasion. This was the second Ame-man by force. - To this Macdonough replied, "he supposed his ship could sink the Siren, but as long as she could swim, he would keep the man." The Briton was in a great passion, and after leaving the Siren, made a demonstration as though he would board the American merchantman, and seize the seaman; but the prompt preparations of Macdonough induced him to relinquish the object.

In the interval between the Tripolitan war and the late war with Great Britain, which commenced in 1812, there were no opportunities for our naval commanders to signalize them-selves; and the life of Macdonough, like those of his companions in arms, furnished no incident of sufficient public importance to be interesting to the reader. It was during these years of repose, that he settled in Middletown. Connecticut, formed an acquaintance with Miss Shaler, and married her. Soon after the declaration of the war of 1812, however, a small naval force was created on Lake Champlain, for the purpose of affording protection to our frontier, and facilitating our mili-tary operations in that quarter. The to augment their forces from year to year, until 1814; when each had four vessels of war; the Americans had tengallies, mounting 16 guns in all, and the British thirteen gallies, mounting 18 guns. The largest American ship, the Saratoga, mounted 26 guns. The Confiance, the largest English ship, mounted thirty-six guns. The total number of American guns was 86; the total number of British, 95.—The American squadron carried two thou-

of his embarkation on board of the Edwin, he gradually sunk away, until sand and twenty-three pounds weight of metal, and eight hundred and twenty men; that of the British nineteen hundred and fifty weight of metal, and one thousand and fifty men. Lieutenant Macdonough commanded the American squadron, and Captain Downie the British.

This was the darkest period of that memorable contest. Perry, it is true, had been gloriously victorious upon Erie, and Chauncey kept the powerful naval force of the enemy upon Lake Ontario, at bay. But in other respects, our plans along the whole Canadian frontier, excepting at the single point of Niagara, had failed. Buffalo and Washington were in ruins; the storm of war howled along our seacoast; New-York was threatened by a powerful fleet; and Wellington's Invincibles were preparing for a descent upon New-Orleans.—Such was the moment seized upon by Sir George Prevost, at the head of an army of 14,000 men, to dislodge Gen. Macomb from Plattsburgh, and ravage our country far and wide. But he deemed the destruction of our armament upon the lake as essential to his success, and Captain Downie bore down to attack Macdonough at the same time that Sir George was to storm the intrenchments at Plattsburgh. The result was a brilliant action of two hours and twenty minutes, fought with the greatest bravery on both sides, and terminating in a glorious victory to the American arms. Not a mast in either squadron could stand to make sail on.
The Confiance had one hundred and five shot in her hull, and the Saratoga fifty-nine. She was, moreover, twice set on fire by the hot shot of the enemy. Never was victory more com-plete, decisive, or in its effects of so great importance; for it was no sooner known, than the opposing land forces made a precipitate and inglorious re-treat, and thus relieved our northern towns from the horrors of a desolating he even threatened to haul the frigate rican Naval victory, achieved fleet to along side of the Siren, and retake the fleet. Perry and Macdonough! names associated in glory—and in death.

The state of New York, which derived the most immediate benefit from this victory, was not backward in testifying its gratitude. The legislature granted him 1000 acres of land, on the bay where he acquired his laurels; and the cities of New-York and Albany each granted him a lot, and the freedom of the respective cities. Macdonough was promoted, and after leaving the lake service, he was placed in command of the naval station at Portsmouth, N. H. By his long services on the lake, and the anxiety and arduous duties of the memorable 10th of September, his health became much impaired and he has never entirely regained it since. So that in acquiring his glory, he contracted his death.

Leaving the Navy Yard in Portsmouth, Lieutenant (now Captain) Macdonough proceeded to the Mediterranean, to protect our commerce in those seas. He returned to his family in Middletown, (Conn.) early in 1824, and after spending the summer there, he repaired to that station in the au-tumn of the same year. His health was then very feeble; but it was hoped British also placed a naval force upon that his favorite element would effect the Lake, and both nations continued a favourable change. He left Mrs. a favourable change. He left Mrs.
Macdonough in perfect health; but a liver complaint carried her off in August last. Nor could one suffice the insatiate archer. The health of the Commodore continued to decline, until it became necessary for him to leave his command, and he embarked for his native country, for which he has done so much, and which he loved > the 10th ultimo, when his breath departed without producing a struggle. But it is not as an officer alone, that the character of Macdonough is to be judged. His virtues in all the relations of private life, were no less worthy of imitation, than his conduct during his public career. In the days of his prosperity, this steady mind remained the same it was before, and neither by his words, his looks, or his actions, could it be discovered that he actions, could it be discovered that he ever varied from that self-balanced consciousness, which is ever the ac-companiment of talent, and is never either palpably depressed, or exalted by the opinions of others. Though a soldier, he was strict in his deportment, and exemplary in his deport-ment, and exemplary in his piety. He had a fine head, light hair, complexion, and eyes; and his person was tall and dignified."
