BOTANY BAY.

When Botany Bay was first established as penal settlement, thirty-seven years ago we be lieve it never entered into the contemplation those who recommended the measure, that see a population and such a state of society, as no exists in the two colonies, could have been create within the first hundred years. The town of Si ney has 1200 houses, and 7000 inhabitants; an such is the demand for land and new building that the former in many places is stated to worth 1000l an acre, and that houses let form 100l to 500l a year. Nothing can be more delightful than the commanding situation of the capitol of the Australasian world. Its noble has bour, with its hundred coves, capable of contain ing all the shipping in the world, its warchouse and its quays, and the number of ships which w sit it, give to it the appearance and bustle of a English scaport. It has two episcopal churche two Methodist churches, and a Roman Cathol church; an excellent market held three day int week, in a large oblong square with commodic public stores for the reception of unsold goods; return for which trifling dues are levied, amoun ing in the year 1817 to 18L and in 1822 to 57

MEN OF STRAW.

A modern traveller in Italy, relates the follow ing whimsical account of a ruse de guerre practis by a highway robber:— My companions in t Diligence were all on the quivive, for the carring had been stopped and robbed two evenings before by a single footpad. This fellow had practised most ingenious and daring stratagem to effect h purpose. He manufactured ten figures of stra-who, in the duskiness of the night appeared ar-ed with fusees and sabres; he drew up in the rain battle array, and having taken his post a litt in advance of his corps, he ordered the Diligen to stop, threatening his tie least resistance was fered, to call up his companions, and put all passengers to death. In this manner he laid whole party under contribution, amongst who were two Spanish merchants, with their servan whose purses were ficavily laden, and who we well armed."
