THE FALL OF MISSOLONGHI.
The patriotic reader will soon learn that Missolonghi, after all, has fallen. But the victors were vanquished in their triumph. The news was brought to Greece on the 23rd of April, by a Greek vessel. The fall of the fortress took place on the 23rd of the same month, after maintaining a siege, and making a defence, unequalled in the annals of warfare. It was Palm Sunday, according to the Greek Calendar, at day break. The Government of the town, being reduced to the last extremity, opened the gates, and the troops of Greeks opened their passage through the town. The latter had scarcely entered the town, when the mines, which had been prepared, exploded, and destruction was the result. Another account states that in their attempt to cut their way through, (the women and children having been placed in the centre of the hollow square) all were massacred by the Moslems.

The Cedar-Apple, or Nut, as it is commonly called, is said to be a powerful vermifuge. Its efficacy was lately discovered by accident.

The following notice of a few of our enterprising countrymen in Europe, is from a letter published in the National Intelligencer, under date of London, May 1, 1826.
Our countryman, Washington Irving, is still in Paris, getting up new "Tales of a Traveller." I suppose John Howard Payne is also there, but still caters for the London Theatres, and in return gets, undoubtedly, profit, but little praise; for the pieces which he manufactures are only suited for the moment, and this is just what the Theatre wants—where, verily "all that glitters is not gold." John Neale has taken up his literary quarters with Jeremy Bentham, who likes Neal for that he hath a taint of Political Economy about him. Neal seems likely to end where he began. Two other young aspirants, lately from America, have commenced their literary career here, under no favourable auspices—Simmons, from South Carolina, and Fairfield, from Connecticut. Simmons inquires into the Moral Character of Lord Byron, which was favourably received in America, has been republished here with success; and Fairfield has contributed an excellent article to Miller's European Magazine. McHenry is in Ireland, finishing his forthcoming "Hearts of Steel." He is a very little fellow, and labours very abjectly in his vocation.

PROPOSALS.
By James F. Brice of the City of Annapolis, FOR PUBLISHING BY SUBSCRIPTION, "The Disciplinary, or Soldier's Guide."
It being intended for the cavalry, regular army, and militia of the United States.
This production is the result of much reflection, unrewarded labour, and diligent research; the author, having at those intervals when relieved from his professional duties, consulted the ablest writers on the subject, with a view of presenting to the public a complete and well organized system of military tactics. The manual exercise is explained with a minuteness of detail not elsewhere to be found. A typo in the manuscript may, of himself, with this book for a guide, by assiduity and attention, acquire a knowledge of the rudiments, or first principles of his profession; and may also, after a few months instruction under a competent teacher, qualify himself for the highest grades in the Army.
Price of the work, neatly bound in boards, $1.50. A subscription paper is lodged at this Office, and Mr. Geo. Shaw's Book Store.
May 1, 1826.
Editors, throughout the Union will confer a favour by giving the above proposals one insertion, or more.
