Now is it not to be regretted that there is no law of the state making princes similar to the state making princes similar to the state making princes similar to the state, punishable by a Justice of the Peace? Such a late would, in the course of time, prove a saying to all the counties of the state. There is stately a term passed by a court of anyone of the counties, at which there is not a free negro arranged and tried any one of the counties, at which there is not a free negro arraigned and tried for a native theft. A GOOD ONE

A hoar worth recording was played upon the inhabitants of a certain village in this County, on Monday of last week. An old maden lady, the sole accupant of a small house and a few place, has been considerably annoyed for some time past by the encroachments of the young urchins of the village upon her domains in their hunting excursions; and divers were the means she resorted to in order to put an end to their depredations upon property; and their intrusions upon her solitude and peace. Her exhortations. and remonstrances, - persuasions and threats to them were alike unavailing,

On Monday morning she visited the village and took no little pains to apprize the inhabitants that she had just seen a large Bear in the woods near her mansion, and in testimony of the truth of her assertion she offered to show where the tracks of his monstrous feet were yet to be een in a sandy road which he crossed! Sun a thing was not impossible, several gentlemen acknowledged to be quite knowing in such matters, upon examination attested that they were genuine, bona fide impression of a Bear paw. The alarm excited in the village cannot well be immagin-

ed. To heighten the excitement, terrible stories were told respecting the ravages of the monster amongst the flocks and herds of the surrounding county. He had as reported during the course of the past week killed and devaured at least half a dozen sheep, as many calles and nearly as many horses and oxen. Little did the old lady imagine that her bear tale, raised merely to frighten the young bays of the town would have had such an ef fect upon the whole village and neighbourhood;-for had Tecumseh with a whole tribe of painted Indians been about to assault the place: more activity could not have been manifested by the inhabitants, than was displyed by them in the preparation of fire arms & other weapons of war wherew in to attack poor Bruin.

The merchant shut up his storethe tavern keeper forsook his bar-the mechanic left his shop. Work was lest undone and dinners were left uneaten). Even Justice herself descended from the bench, and Junges, suitors witnesses, jurors, constables and law-yers all started full speed in pursuit of the BearA. The muskets of a uniform company of the village were put in requisition, and some forty or fifty men, consisting of merchants, farmers, shoe-makers, Physicians, tavern keepers, tailors, black miths, and lawyers, and even one printer, composed the gang, which in carriages, composed the gang, which in carriages, on horseback, and on foot; posted for the place where this beast of the folest was said to have been seen. Nothing could be heard but cries of the par,—the bear,—the but cries of the lear,—the bear,—the bear. The sportsman tasted in imagination the pleasures of the giorious hunt,—the epicure that supping upon a delicious bear steal, and the land-lord the happiness of selling the grog necessary to give it a proper relish. There could be seen leaning from the window the affectionate wife whiching with anxious cellisting, that next of the distant ous solicitude that part of the distant street though which the hunters would return—the cheering hope that her spouse would be the honoured and hapny man from whose arm Bruit was des tined to receive his death blow enli-vening her countenance, while at another might be seen the youthful maiden, her eager eyes evidencing the joy she should feel if her enaporate should be the fortunate warrior appointed to take the scalp of the Bear The vigilance and spirit manifested by the hunters deserved be ter success. They spent the whole a ternoon in scouring one of the most saidy regions of country in the Union of perhaps five in less square, —worried their dogs, —and returned home towards evening tired and worn home towards evening tired and worn down themselves, and received nothing in roturn for their days workbut disappointment, and chaprin. In an ordinary case, a day's hunt without getting any game is calculated to a cite no vexation, but in this they experienced the additional mortification of sarning that they had been made game of, for the old lady when recovered from her fright occasioned by the effect is her relation, confessed the bear traits in relation, confessed the bear traits in the road were made by her bare hands, with the residue of the story was manufactured by her and embell by her wags for the accession.

He took occasion from this, to descapt on the duty of young men marrying soon, and relieving the dreaminess of their situationaby a young and handsome bride. He said, that though they possessed all he wealth of the world, and were masters of all the world, and were masters of all the gems of the East Indies, and the jewels of the West Indies, and the were not married, they all wanted the most valuable gem of all—an agreeable wife. He said, that there was greeable wife. He said, that there was a popular song at present called Home, sweet Home, which he had often admired for its toughing simplicity and exquisite, pathos. It was so appropris ate to the subject, as describing so well the happiness of domestic enjoyment, and, by analogy and anticipation, the happiness of Heaven, that, although he could not sing it to them. yet he would take the liberty of repeating a verse or two of it, for the be-nefit of the younger part of his hear

The differences between Russia and Persia assume a delicate aspect. It seems that the Persians, without any previous indications of hostility, had nade an incursion in Russia with 10,000 men, and burned several villages and carried off a number of per-sons.
