SCOTLAND. From the Inverness Courier, DREADFUL BTORM.—Friday Isst, the 24th November, this part of the country was visited by a storm, at once so tempestaous in its character, and disastrons in its effects, that th remembrance of it will remain for many, years to come, with all who were witnesses of it. About 7 o'clock that morning, the gale burst out with fury, accompanied with thick falling to snow, and occasional showers of sleet, in a manner that afforded but little hope for the safety of any living thing that might have been exposed to its fu-ry. The Martinmas market, which was held here that day, was the means, however, of leading many persons from home, and the town was more crowded than could have been expected from the state of the weather. During the whole of that day, and the following night, the storm continued unabated and even in town, it became a matter of peril to pass from one house or street to another. As little or no business could be done in the streets, many of the people resorted in groups to the shelter afforded by the closes in town, and others to the public houses—and it is to be feared that to the necessarily prolonged visits of the people to these places of entertainment, several of the accidents of that night must be ascrib turing home from the town to their pla-ces of abode in the country, is variously estimated: there is a certainty, how ever, that no fewer than 11 or 12 per ished in the vicinity of Inverness.

A man and woman were found dead two other persons died on the road from this town to Nairos A we of the name of Grant, although accompanied by a sister, who could offer he little help, expired at the Bridge o Moniack, within a short distance of her own house.
