Having parefully examined the American Grammar," adapted it in to my School, and had some experience in the use of it, I consider this work a most happy, timely, and ju-dictors innovation upon the best sys-tem of philology the English tongue had to boast.—I say happy, because of the masterly manner of its execu-tion,—timely, because there were certain pettifoggers in Grammar, who, for the honour of the science, wanted crushing,—and judicious, because its author has saved every article that was worth 'preserving from the una-voidable wreck of our old friend Mur-

No English Scholar, however learn this book. Grammarians who have for cash, to satisfy the debt due as een made such by the instruction of Murray, will be amply repaid for re-suming the subject, if they look well into the renovated system now sented. They, especially, will find the task both easy and delightful; they will acknowledge the develope-ment of superior light, confess the removal of difficulties, and see innu merable obscurities chased from the science

How much the pupil has accomtence, and to transpose its members. great deal of mechanical practice, a its correct performance no method ever cable, as that which the American Grammar now furnishes Its parsing plan, I mean the whole of the scanning and sectionizing system must certainly prove to be of incalculable utility. In short, its improvements are rad ical,-exposing and abandoning fundamental errors of the old system. Its definitions are correct, lucid and elegant—challenging the keenest criticism, and doing honour to American pretensions. Its arrangement looks like SCIENCE. The style of the book is the style which Philosophy loves-truth and simplicity are its striking characteristics. And, to say can Grammar, by James Brown, seems to possess a complete fitness for that only legitimate purpose, of all Grammar—namely, to transcribe, up-on our neighbour's mind, a true and faithful copy of 'he picture on our onw Success to all J. BALTIMORE, July 12, 1827. From the Rev. Mr. Morrison.

I have attentively perused Mr. James Brown's American Grammar, and in stating my opinion of it, I must sav that it possesses much merit. And to the student who has been through Murray's System, I consider the American Grammar an invaluable work. The sectional reading is certainly an improvement, and on that account I shall out Mr. Brown's Grammar into the hands of my pupils.
GEORGE MORRISON.

DEAR SIR:-Agreeably to your re quest, I have examined the American Grammar, and am much pleased with To state wherein your work excels the old system, would far exceed the limits prescribed. I think, however, it would be unjust to confine my self to a cold and general assent to it merits. The attention which you have paid to a clear lucidation of the sub ect, and to the exclusion of every hing which might obscure it, must ne cessarily recommend your production far higher than any thing which I can

As a teacher. I have found from ex studied as a drudgery, and imposed upon youth as a wearisome task, yours is seized with avidity, and its study entered into with delight. This is not surprising, when it is considered that in place of burdening the memory as does the old system, you gradually tax the intellect. In your system the learner has the satisfaction of knowing derstanding what he committee. I have to add only, that your work is an in-valuable production, even to those who have already attended to Murray's system. And I hope, that your Grammar will recommend itself to others as it has to me, and that teachers will gene rally introduce it.

I remain, dear sir, yours, &c. RICHARD KEMP, Teacher. Baltimore, July 17, 1827.
