APPEARANCE OF BOTANY-BAY

Although all you see are English faces, and you hear no other language but English spoken, yet you soon become aware you are in a country very different from England, by the number of parrots and other birds of strange note and plumage, which you observe hanging at so many doors, and cagefall of which you will soon see exposed for sale as you proceed. The government gang of convicts, also marching backwards and forwards from their work, in single military file, and the solitary ones stragging here and there with their white woollen Parmats frocks. & trousers, or grey or yellow jackets, with duck overalls, (the different styles of dress denoting the oldness or new-ness of their arrival.) all daubed over with broad arrows P. B's. C. B's. and various numerals in black, white and red, with perhaps the jail gang straddling suikily by in their jingling leg chain, tell a tale too plain to be mis understood. At the corners of streets and before many of the doors, fruit stalls are to be seen, teeming in their proper seasons, with oranges, lemons, limes, figs, grapes, peaches, necta-rines, apricots, plums, apples, pears, &c. at very moderate prices. [Cunningham's New-South Wales.

STATE OF SOCIETY AT BOTANY BAY. When strolling through the streets of Sidney, on first landing, very singu lar reflections will naturally intrude upon the mind, on perceiving the safe ty with which you may jostle through the crowds of individuals now suffer-ing, or who have suffered the punishnent awarded by the law for their oftences, men binished often for deepest crimes, with whom in England you would shudder to come in contact. Elbowed by some daring highwayman on your left hand, and rubbed shoul ders with by even a more desperate burglar on your right; a foot-pad per haps stops your way in front, and pickpocket pushes you behind—all re-tired from their wonted vocations, and now peacefully complying with the tasks imposed upon them, or following quietly up the even path pointed by honest industry. But nothing will surprise you more than the quietness and rder which prevail in the streets, and the security wherewith you may perambulate them at all hours of the night, indifferently watched as they ire, and possessing so many convenient situations wherein robbers may conceal themselves, pounce upon you, and make their escape with their boo ty without even a chance for detecti-

GOLDSMITH.

The following adventure of Gold smith is thought to have given rise to his pleasing comedy, "She stoops to Conquer, or the mistakes of a Night." Some friend of Goldsmith had given him a guinea, and in his way to Edge worthstown, which is about twenty miles from his father's house, he had diverted himself the whole day by viewing the gentlemen's seats on the road, until, at the fill of night, he found iniself in a small town, named Ardagh here he inquired for the best house in the place, meaning an inn; but being understood too literally, he was shown to the house of a private gentleman, when, calling for somebody to take his horse, and lead him to the stable, he alighted, and was shown into the parbeing supposed to be a guest found sitting by a good fire. This gentleman immediately discovered Oliver's mistake, and being a man of humour, and also learning from him the name of his father, who happened to be his acquaintance, he encouraged the deception. Oliver accordingly called a-bout him, ordered a good supper, and generously invited the master, his wife and daughter, to partake of it; treated them with a bottle or two of wine, and at going to bed, ordered a hot cake to be prepared for his breakfast; nor was it till at his departure, when he called for the bill, that he found he had been hospitably entertained in a private family. Goldsmith's Life.

Dr. Johnson said of Goldsmith, "no man was more feelish when he had not a pen in his hand, or more wise when he had.

'Lord Erskine,' says Dr. E. Clarke, 'told me that Burke's manner was sometimes bad, 'it was like that of an Irish Chairman.' 'Once,' said he, 'I was so tired of hearing him, in a debate upon the India bill, that, not likwas so tired of hearing him, in a debate upon the India bill, that, not liking he should see me leave the House of Commons, while he was speaking. I crept along under the benches, and got out and went to the Isle of Wight. Afterwards, that very speech of his was published, and I found it to be so extremely beautiful, that I actually worg it into pieces by reading it." wore it into pieces by reading it."

ANDREW JACKSON Was born on the 15th day of March 1767. His father, (Andrew) the young-est son of his family, emigrated to A-merica from Ireland during the year 1768. 1765, bringing with him two sons, Hugh and Robert, both very young. Landing at Charleston, South Carolina, he shortly afterwards purchased a tract of land, in what was then called the Waxsaw settlement, about 45 miles above Camuen, at which place Andrew was born. Shortly after his birth, his father died, leaving three sons to be provided for by their mother. To the lessons she inculcated on the youthful minds of her sons, was no doubt owing, in a great measure, that fixed op-position to British tyranny and oppres-sion, which afterwards so much distin-guished them. Often would she spend the winter's evenings in recounting to them the sufferings of their grandfa-ther, at the siege of Carrickfergus, and the oppression exercised by the nobili-ty of Ireland, over the labouring poor; impressing it upon them, as a first duty, to expose their lives, if it should become necessary, in defending and supporting the natural rights of man.

At the tender age of fourteen, while fighting in the ranks of his country, in the holy cause of freedom, he was tak-en by the British; and while under confinement, received a sabre cut, on his arm, the marks of which he carries to this day, because he refused to do to this day, because he refused to do the menial duty of a servant and clean the boots of an officer. His brother, a few years older than himself, and also a prisoner, taken at the same time, for refusing to perform the same office, was Left alone in the world, with a small patrimonial estate, barely sufficient to support him while he should obtain the first elements of an academic education, he began life without a guide or adviser. increasing, he was in 1797 sent to the senate of the union. After his resignation in the senate, he was appointed a judge of the su-preme court of the state, which office he held with great credit to himself for several years, when he resigned it, and accepted shortly after of a Major Genergi's Commission in the militia of the state.

In person, Jackson is tall and slender, but erect and commandings. In his deportment he is uncommonly dig-nified; in his address courteous and conciliating; and, in his manners mild, and prepossessing. ANECDOTE.

An Irish gentleman being visited by a friend, was found a little ruffled, and being asked the reason of it, said he had lost a new pair of black silk stock-
