THE LAND OF DREAMS.

From the Draught of Immortality, and other Poems, by Mr. Parker.
Where is the Land of Dreams?
The land where sleepers see
Those smooth and silent streams
So calm and serene?
Those trees that are as still
As the shades of trees below,
When they sleep on the lonely hill
In the summer moonlight's glow?
Where is the land of Dreams—Ah where?
For I would be a dweller there.
There, glorious temples shine,
Thick frosted o'er with gems
Unknown in earthly mine,
Or earthly diadems;
And ever-blooming bowers
In dim and dewy dells,
All formed of light and flowers,
And the ocean's glittering shells,
Where such low music floats around
As 'twere the shadow of a sound.
Upon the ocean shore
Of that resplendent land,
Where the emerald-waters pour
Upon a silver sand,
The traveller may stray
With sleep, his silent guide,
And watch the forms that play
Upon that glorious tide,
Dim and faint, as the mists that break
At sunrise, from a mountain lake.
He may see the Nereids there,
Each in her pearly shell,
With long and dazzling hair,
Float on the ocean's swell,
And hear the rustling sweep
Of the Tritons, as they dash
Into from the sparkling deep;
And toss upon the sunny sea,
To the roar of the sea-god's minstrelsy.
Where is the Land of Dreams?
Where the hearts, that earth divides,
May meet like winter streams,
When spring unbinds their tides;
Where, for a little space,
Unchecked and unimproved
We gaze upon the face
We have so fondly loved?
And lose while the gloom of wo
That shadows our soul lies below.
The mariner, who goes
From his weary watch on deck,
When the midnight billow throes
Its shadow o'er the wreck,
Forgets awhile the bark,
With her masts all hewn away,
That drifts through storm and dark,
Across the pathless sea;
And to the Dream-land, fair and far,
Flies from the tempest's sullen jar,
He sees his cottage thatch
By the willowed river's side,
And the banks, where he would watch
The white swan down and glide,
When the morning mists lay still
On the broad grey river's breast,
And sunrise fringed the hill
As with a golden crest,
And the sky lark warbled from his shroud,
The din white, summer-morning cloud,
Where is that shadowy place,
Where the weary horse and hound
Renew the fiery chase
To the bugle's sylvan sound?
Where they brush the dew again
From the clover and the thorn,
While copse and woody glen
Echo the willow's horn,
And the pack's glad bay, and the huntman's cheer,
Fall faint upon the dreamer's ear.
Oh! where is the land where friends
Meet in those silent hours,
When the starlight dew descends
Upon the sleeping flowers?
There the changed, the cold, the dead,
Return, and with them bring
The blessed light which staid
Such joy of life's young spring,
As stars, that fade from morning skies,
Rise bright again when daylight dies,
Where is the land of Dreams—oh where?
For I would be a dweller there.

MISS BATHURST.

The history of this highly interesting young lady is already, I believe, in part before the public, yet none but those on the spot can fully appreciate the sensations which it caused at Rome. It was but the evening before that she had appeared in a very brilliant circle of her admiring friends, at a ball given at her own house, previous, it was supposed, to her approaching nuptials. Her intended was already at Turin, and every day expected at Rome. She seemed to those who hung upon her steps that night, and saw the rays of hope and joy which lightened about her features, in which were realized all we can desire for our countrywomen, to have touched the very verge of human felicity, and to be altogether invulnerable to the shafts of the future. Providence disposed it otherwise; the adieu of that evening were eternal. It was rather a boisterous night, and the rains for some days had continued to swell the Tiber. It is a favorite lounge of the English at this season. A young Oronian, for instance, likes to compare it with his Horace, and every one, with his Shakespeare. The next day the rains had ceased, and that Italian sun, which never deserts his children for an considerable period, permitted and invited a ride. The ambassador proposed, as I am informed, the direction of the river. His proposal was fatally acquiesced in. The whole cavalcade proceeded by the Porta del Popolo along the road which leads to the Tiber. They were soon at the Ponte Mollé. On the right of the road, and the Etruscan side of the river, a small path conducts to a vineyard. They wished to see every thing to advantage, and without reflecting on the changes that had taken place since their last visit, engaged at once in the hazardous attempt of gaining its gate, and viewing the "yellowness" and "chafoing" of the waters at their leisure. The path was narrow, they were obliged to advance one by one. All dismounted, except Miss Bathurst. It was a fatal circumstance! but would have been of no consequence, unless connected with others. On their arriving at this point, the gate of the vineyard, contrary to custom, was found closed, and they were obliged to return. The path was slippery—the bank of the Tiber was shelving—the flood rapid and particularly high. Her horse hesitated, she attempted to impel him forward; his hind foot slipped, and the next instant precipitated both horse and rider, into the very centre of the stream.

The consternation on every side was dreadful; every one lost his presence of mind. It is said that none of the party could swim except her own servant, who, by one of those fatalities so beyond the reach of all human prudence as to appear an immediate interposition of Providence, had been sent, in the outset of their promenade back to Rome for her pelisse. It is quite certain at least that no attempt was made, and perhaps no attempt would have been successful in rescuing her from her fate. Life, however, twice rallied and appeared in all the horror of an unequal struggle with death; twice she rose from the waters, and brandishing her whip over her head, called on her friends by her endearing name to "save—save—save her." In the next instant she disappeared, and was never heard or seen more. Her horse floated on with the current, and landed lower down. All Rome flucked the day after to the spot; fifty boats were ordered for the discovery of the body, but the appearance of many engaged in the search, emptied them from the charge of any other motive than humanity. Nothing could be more honourable, indeed, to the Romans than their feelings on this occasion; but youth, beauty, misfortune, in this country make more impression than the revolution of empires. Her uncle retired to the Villa Spada, where his grief for many days bordered upon insanity; he had been one of the unfortunate witnesses of her death. For hours after the catastrophe was announced in Rome, I saw many silent faces on the Scala of the Trinita de Monte, her late residence, gazing with the deepest sympathy on the closed shutters and funeral tranquility of one of the gayest houses in the town. Every effort was made for the recovery of the body, but for many weeks in vain. It was at last found; not, indeed, as was conjectured, near the city, but almost in the very spot where she fell. The subscriptions and other ruins of the ancient Pons Milvius had detained it on its way. It was conveyed to a small osteria near; all traces of beauty had been blotted and washed out; the rings only by which it was identified remained. The next morning, at a very early hour, in the midst of the tears of a few friends, the remains were consigned to the Cemetery degli Inglesi. There I am informed they still rest in peace! and few Englishmen pass thro' Rome without visiting the tomb of their unfortunate countrywoman.

RANAWAY
From the subscriber on the 15th instant, my negro girl named HARRIET PHILLIPS, about 13 years of age, rather dark complexion, four feet 4 or 5 inches high, when spoken to swamers, (at times) very much, has a wart on one of her hands; she had on when she absconded a homemade frock, a blue and striped petticoat, and a pair of blue yarn stockings. I have no doubt but she will change her clothing. As I have every reason to believe that she was induced to abscond by her father Charles Phillips, who is in the habit of attending the Baltimore markets in the summer with Crabs, I think it very likely that she will be conveyed to Baltimore by her father, probably in a bateau. Any one taking up the above described Girl, so that I get her again, shall receive the above reward, if taken in Anne Arundel or Baltimore county, if taken out of the above counties $30 reward.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE
COURT OF APPEALS OF MARYLAND,
To be Reported by Thomas Harris, Esquire, Clerk of the Court of Appeals, and Revery Johnson, Esquire, Attorney at Law.
These Decisions will form a continuation of the first volume of Reports already published by Messrs Harris and Johnson, which closes with the year 1805. It is proposed to publish the Decisions in a Series of Numbers, each to contain not less than one hundred and twenty five pages, and four numbers to constitute a volume. The last number of each volume will contain a full and complete Index. This mode of publication, it is conceived, possesses advantages which give it a decided preference to that of publishing the Reports in bulky volumes. It ensures the earlier publication of the Reports, and as not more than four numbers will be published in a year, the expense will not be so sensibly felt.
TERMS
The price of each number of the Reports will be $1 25, payable on delivery.
Subscriptions to the above work are received at GEO. SHAW'S Store, the Maryland Gazette Office, and the respective Offices of the County Clerks of this State.

PROPOSAL

FOR PRINTING
The Journals of the Conventions of the Provinces of Maryland, Held in the City of Annapolis, in the years 1774, 1775 and 1776.

IF Sufficient encouragement be offered, the Subscriber proposes to publish, in one volume octavo, the Journals of the Conventions of the Provinces of Maryland in the years 1774, '75 and '76. It is believed that there are more than two copies of these Journals now extant; and from the circumstance that they were printed in pamphlet form, and unbound, it may be fairly concluded that they, too, must in a few years be destroyed by the mere decay of time. These Journals are the authentic evidence of the Political History of Maryland, during that interesting and unquiet period. Although we have, in abundance, histories of Maryland, as connected with the association of Provinces and Colonies, that time formed, for mutual protection against the improper assumption of power on the part of the Mother Country, yet none of these works embrace what may be termed its Domestic or Internal Political History.

THE TRAVELLERS.

This part of the history of Maryland it should be her pride to hand down to posterity, not only on account of its deep interest, but as a public record of the voluntary sacrifices, daring spirit, and determined resolution, of her citizens, during the period of doubt and dismay. In the confident expectation that the citizens of Maryland will consider the proposed publication of sufficient importance to entitle it to their patronage, the Subscriber is induced to issue these proposals.

The following exquisite poem, by the late Bishop Heber, from the last Review. The writer there conveys a supposition to any of his poems published, even to "Palestine," which warmly that he knows "few derms and no living one who might lead us to own it." This is saying a good deal, but hardly too much. It is a beautiful picture, and will be highly valued by the finest pieces of its kind in our language.
