It is statement has been shamefully distorted; but I think the anecdote worthy of any pulpit, and calcula ed to do good. Would to God that many admirers of Gen. Jackson would record this among many of his patriotic and excellent sentiments, on the tablets of their hearts! They would they cease to excellent sentiments, on the tablets of their hearts! They would then cease to think him likely to prove a patron of their extirminating party zeal and licentious lives. I have repeated the same anecdote, years ago in Fleming ton. N. Examples of capital punishments in the army of the United States, are as rare as they are painful. It were to be wished, that the crime for which it is now to be inflicted was equally rare; a crime which disgraces the offender. by the double character of perfidy and cowardice. Abandoned must be the man, who takes the reward of his country, pledges himself by oath to its service, and meanly deserts its de fence amid the prospect of foreign dan ger. May the character of the American soldier cease to be stained by examples of such baseness. But it a sense of faith and duty under a mild his firm determination, to repress by his firm determination, to repress by adequate means, offences destructive to the service.

It would be unjust to visit upon the great mass of either party the irregularities of particular individuals belonging to them. For example, the American ing to them. For example, the American is proverbial for publishing all sorts of slanders and untruths which the editor imagines can help his party. Yet it would be unfair, illogical and illiberal, to say that the great mass of the Adams party in this city are litle and slanderous gossip, because the editor of the American is so.
