THE LATE SPRING.
BY JONAS GREEN.
The sleepy Spring was still in bed, And to rise was slowly preparing. When she heard the soft fall on the zephyr's tread, Who came to give her an airing. She rose in haste, not dressed in blue, But clad in her wintry mourning. Just stuck in her bosom a snow drop or two, Her brow a faint smile adorning.

Then away over garden, and meadow, and wood. Her light winged courser bore her; But in her fair eyes the tear drop stood, To see the drear scene before her. So long had the tyrant of northern birth, His iron reign extended. That gentle commerce of sky and earth Had well nigh been suspended.

The young birds had met on St. Valentine's feast. All eager to get married; But the sullen saint refused to be priest: For another red day they have tarried. The crocus had put forth its feelers green, But drew in its head in affright, On hearing the pease, as soon seen, Had been all cut off in a night.

The lilac gay, that loves to be first, Stood shivering still and pouting; And many a bud was longing to burst, But its orders, yet, was doubting. The fields were as bald as tho' they'd been stone. As brown as if Summer had burned them. The hedges were naked as when they were born. For their buds you could scarce have discerned them.

The rivers ran low thro' the failure of snow. Yet their banks, it seems, never stood firmer. But they longed for the rains which the Spring should bestow. That again they might bubble and murmur, And the Queen of the Season, so ill did she feel, She again took to bed in pure sorrow; But the Sun has been called in, her sickness to heal, And we hope she'll be better to-morrow.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.
THE STUMP-TAILED COW.
A Jersey Anecdote
A good many years ago, a man stole a cow from Morristown, N. J. and drove her to Philadelphia for sale. She was a common cow enough, except that she had lost all her tail but about six inches. The thief, fearing that by the shortness of her tail he might be traced, had procured in some way, probably from a slaughter house, another cow's tail, which he fastened so ingeniously to the short tail, that it was not to be known that it had not regularly grown there.

As soon as the Jerseyman missed his cow, he set off for Philadelphia, thinking she would probably be carried there for sale. It happened that when he came to the ferry he got into the same boat that was carrying over his cow, and the fellow who stole her. As it was natural that he should have his thoughts very much upon cows, he soon began to look at this one with great attention. She was, indeed, very much like his cow, he thought. Her marks agreed wonderfully, and she had exactly the same expression of face, but then the expression of her tail was so very different. It must be supposed that the new owner of the cow felt rather uncomfortable during this examination, for he soon saw that this was the person whose property he had stolen, and he was very uneasy lest he should take hold of the tail which he looked at so continually.—Upon the whole he thought it best to divert his attention in some way, if possible, and therefore steps up to him and says, "neighbour, that is a fine cow of mine, would you buy her? you seem to know what a good cow is." "Oh dear me," says the other, "I've just had a cow stolen from me." "Well," says the thief, "I'm sorry to hear they've got to stealing cattle, but I'll sell off, and you could not better replace your loss than by buying this cow; I'll warrant she's as good as yours." "Why," says the Jerseyman, "she was exactly like this one, only that she had no tail to speak of, and if this one had not such a long tail I'd swear it was my cow." Every body now began to look at the cow's tail, but the thief stood nearer to it than any body, and taking hold of it as just to cover the splicing with his left hand, and a jack knife in his right, pointing to the tail, he said, "so if this cow's tail were only this long, you'd swear she was yours."

"That I would," says the other, who began to be very much confused at the perfect resemblance to his cow, except in this one particular, when the thief, with a sudden cut of his knife, took off the tail, just about an inch above the splicing, and throwing it overboard, bloody as it was, turned to the other and said, "now swear it's your cow!" The bewilderment of the poor man was now complete, but as he had seen the tail cut off, and saw the blood trickling from it, he could, of course, lay no claim to the animal from the shortness of her tail; indeed, here was proof positive that this was not his cow, so the thief, going over with him, sold the cow without any further fear of detection.

The coin that is most current among mankind, is flattery, the only benefit of which is, that by hearing what we are not, we may be instructed what we ought to be. All complaisance on the profession of belief, is a premium on hypocrisy.
