From the London Courier of July 80. PERILOUS BALLOUN ASCENT ON HORSEBACK.

late, that they have ceased to attract much attention; and we are afraid, though the gardens contained a great was to mount on a pony. Many re-garded this as a hoax, or as intended only as a lure; and, as the announcement was coupled with a reservation in favour of the weather, it was generally concluded that when the time came Mr. Green would find the wind too Mr. Green would find the wind too violent to allow of this new Pagasean flight. Fortunately for his reputation, a d greatly to the satisfaction of the speciators, the weather, which had been occasionally showery and stormy became fine towards evening, there was still a good breeze; and after wait ing nearly two hours beyond the ap-pointed time, five o'clock, the poor po-ny was brought out, and placed in his stall, under the ballone. Mr. 6, mounted him, the ropes were loosened. mounted him, the ropes well aloft taking and the balloon soared aloft taking with it the and the batton soared and taking a southerly direction, carrying with it the man and the animal. The pony evi-dently distiked the excursion, and pronged violently at the moment of the scent, greatly to the terror of the spec ators. What Mr. Green may baye tators. What Mr. Green may have tators. What Mr. Green may have tators at commencing such a journey, with such a companion we know not. His exertions to preserve quiet and or tler seeined wholly to occupy him, and perhaps his fears were not equal to the spectators' apprelionsion, but we never saw a neck that we thought in greater jeopardy than Mr. Green's, except one cutioner. After a short time the pony to his situation, and to remain compa-ratively quiet. Long after the balloon had reached such a height, however, as to render the struggles of the anima imperceptible, we saw what we conjectured was the grapnel fall down, as it Mr. Green had not got all his materials under his command. The balloon is one with which Mr.

and was made, we understand chiefly by his son. It is perfectly well formed, but plain, having no ornaments whatever; but the alternate slips of silks of which it is composed are painted brown and dark yellow. The material was worsen expressly for Mr. Green; and the whole cost him, although the great of the work was done by memer part of the work was done by mem bers of his own family, upwards of 500l It is capable, we are informed, of con taining about 11,000 cubic feet. The expense of filling it with the carburetted hydrogen, at the Gas Works, which is far the most convenient and filling such vehicles with hydrogen generated by sulphuric acid and from fillings, it would cost nearly 100%. Mr Green's balloon was filled over nigh at the Independent Gas Works at Hag gerston, about one mile and a half from the tavern, and conducted thither by several men, with ropes, very early yesterday morning. It was allowed to remain in the gardens, fastened to the ground by weights, and there graceful ly swinging to and fro, formed a beautiful spectacle through the day.

For a long time the spectators, some of whom assembled at a very early hour, were lost in conjecturing what Mr. Green meant in annouacing an as cent on horseback, till they were at length shown a very pretty Shetland length shown a very pretty Shetanti pony, one of the smillest of the breed we ever saw. It has been very care-fully trained by Mr. Green, to whom it belongs, and has already made one or two ascents with him to such a height as the ropes would allow. The keeper described it as very docile, being accustomed to walk up and down stairs, and to lie down on the hearthrug, at the command of its master. It drinks tea out of a cup, bows to the ladies, and offers his foot to gentlemen when it is commanded to salute them. In order to show the wondering and doubting crowd that no trick was intended, the beautiful little and well-trained animal, decorated with blue satio housing, bridle and ribbands, was led round the gardens, bowing to the company, and much exciting their admiration; still those who could not get near enough to these who could not get near enough to the company of the company, and thouse who could not get near enough to there of by the Chancellor Upon the enstamed to walk up and down stairs. gardens, howing to the company, and much exciting their admiration; still those who could not get near enough to see by what machinery the pony was to be sent aloft, doubted that Mr. Green meant to keep his word. All doubt was. however, at length dissipated when the car was removed, and its place supplied stand, of strong and close wicker work, covered with green cloth. Its diameter was just large enough to per mit the pony to stand in it, and the fact of the animal were fastened to the fact of the fact of the fact of the animal were fastened to the fact of t inches high, and six strong cords, ar equal distances from one another, sus pended it to the usual strong ash hoop

We could not as certain if he had secured himself to the hoop or nattime. nough the gardens contained a great number of persons, that Mr. Green did not find the public curiosity very profitable to him. The novelty which at tracted the people—though however of the it may have been seen, a balloon ascending majestically into the protein ascending majestically into the untried regions of the air is a glorious sight—was the announcement that Mr. Green yound the sound of the music, and the youd the sound of the music, and the acclamations with which Mr. Green was greeted at parting; yet such a pre caution as this, must have been highly necessary. > The London Sun of August 30th says - The French papers say, of the authority of a letter from Jassy, that a false estimate was formed of the amount of the force which the bel tigerent powers were able to carry in to the field, and that the Sultan ha really more troops than the letters from Constantiumle assigned him.— Thus it is explained how the operati-ons of the Russian army, which were calculated for a faint resistance, are now paralized. The Porkish infantry, which preceding accounts rated at 60,000 inen at the utinoat, is now said to exceed 200,000; the cavalry, estimat ed at 10,000 is now stated at 50,000 Their artillery, too, appears to be much there are above 500 pieces of cannon, perfectly well served, in the camp of Shumla alone. Constantinople, July 26. The hope which the Porte had conceived that its position on the northern side of the Balkan would form a bulwark against the Russian armies, has been nearly justified by a series of successful en gagements fought since the beginning of July. It appears that the Russian commanders had not collected impos ing forces upon any particular point but lost much time in partial attacks which having been repelled by the Turks, in-pired the latter with great additional courage, and confirmed the Porte in the -ystem of operations which The first Bulletin from the Turkish
