In further support of this claim the committee would assume, with one accord, the arguments employed in the communication referred to them—"in discharging a just debt there can on no occasion be any proper guounds for discrimination between the interest and principal, and certainly, no pretext for doing so, on the present occasion, as we had to sell a portion of our most valuable and productive capital, consisting of United States stock bearing an interest of six per cent, to discharge debts growing out of expenditures which should have been, at the time, incurred by the federal government."

In accordance with those sisses the committee present the following preamble and resolutions:
