From the (N. J.) Eagle. THE LAY OF THE DEMON OF NICH

THE LAY OF THE DEMON OF NICH
When the wild wind blows
Is its fearful might,
And the pile moon throws
But a feeble light,
When the stars are at rest
In their homes in the sky,
And the light clouds haste
In their swiftness by—love on the craggy rock to stand,
and brave the storm with a giant's hand.
When the seremult a grant's hand.

When the sea-gull screams
O'er the rolling wave,
And the sea-lion dreams In his lonely cave, When the sentinel sleeps When the sentinel sleeps
On his weary post,
And the wanderer weeps
For the home he has lost—
I gaze in pride on the world's dark mich—

The dreary king of a dreary scene. When the dark sea roars In its wakened wrath, In its wakened wrath,
And destruction lowers
O'er the mariner's path,
When the cowardly stare
Shrinks back in safright,
And the nobly brave
Turn away from the sight—
I perch on the top of the sailless mast,
And laugh when the whelming wave has pass

When the murderer goes, At the midnight hour, To deal his blows, To deal his blows,
With a fiendlish power,
As he leans o'er the bed
Of his destined prey,
Who hears not his tread,
And who heeds not his way—
am there! I am there! at his right hand, nerre his arm and I speed his brand.
On the temport I—in

I nerve his arm and I speed his brand.

On the tempest I ride
On the bounding wave,
From my island of pride
Which the norm seas lave,
I hover when death
And destruction are nigh
To hear the last breath
And to catch the last sigh;
Ye may see me at midnight when the wild
blast how's loud,
Abroad in the story & armyed in a should

Abroad in the storm & arrayed in a shroud.

A SHIRT

cution.

A SHIRT
I asked a lady—not a flirt,
How many pieces made a shirt?
To which, in answer, she replied—
Yam'll put a piece on either side;
Two gussets, and two shoulder straps;
Two waist bands, and then, perhaps
You'll put two pieces on the neck.—
My stars—of pieces here's a peck!
I think; my lady, with your leave,
That each arm will want a sleeve.—
What next, my lady, will you find us?
Two little gussets, and two binders,
A collar, body, heart and frill;
And these I think your list will fill;—
And so they'd need, I'm sure there's plenty,
Count the number—there's just twenty. Count the number-there's just twenty.

From the Philadelphia Souvenir.

THE HOUSE ON THE CLIFF. On the morning of a fine day, in the spring of 1819, I embarked in a Durham boat, at Easton, Pa. for Philadel-phia. I passed my time pleasantly in listening to the songs and anecdotes of the boatmen, and viewing the beautiful and sometimes sublime scenery pre-sented on either side. At one place, the shore recoded with a gentle upward tance of hills, appearing blue in the distance, at another they stood proudly up, looking upon the fresh blooming lowlands. But in a particular place the appearance was as if a mountain by some powerful convulsion, had been severed in the midst, for the lofty precipiees on each side were shout the same height, and the projecting crags appeared as if they once articulated as a geological anatomist would say. The river there grew narrower in its channcl, and dashed and foamed and roarpointed to investigate certain matters connected with the subject called falls; and according to the hyof the chancery records, and for the transmission of printed copies thereof, to the members of the legislature. minute. Many of the rocks are over-flown by the water, especially at the time of freshets. Those would cause the wreck of many a poor man's hopes, but that their situations are marked by out that their situations are marked by a line of poles that have been erected on them, and from which wave the red flags of warning. In passing these falls, the heaving waves occasion much difficulty to the boatmen, dashing over the sides of the boat, and demanding the constant labour of its conductors to prevent their becoming our warnalprevent their becoming overwhelmen. According to my remembrance, not many houses overlooked the river, but I noticed one that I must particularize. It stood on the Pennsylvania shore.

In attord one that I must particularize. It stood on the Pennsylvania shore, immediately on the brow of one of the opposite cliffs I have mentioned, and it seemed so small that you might, have imagined an eagle had flown off with a saked me to go in and, seek het. And saked in I happened to be acquainted with the history, of this hopes, and the history, of this hopes, and the close of the history of the company of the comp nous of approaching misfortune.

When the Hessians entered Tren? ton, they considered the flying Americans as harmless as if disbanded, and resigning themselves to every species of dissipation. One of their sergeants named Baum, quartered himself at the house of Mr. Gardiner, and exercised a high authority in regard to his com-forts. The lone widow would have had to endure even greater impositions than she did, had it not been that the sergeant took a fancy to Elizabeth, in consequence of which, whenever she was in his presence, his nature appeared less rude than usual, and his whole behaviour assumed a cast wonderfully sentimental. These manifestations of partiality became more striking every time Elizabeth appeared before him, until, at last he openly avowed his feel-ings, and became lavish in his efforts to obtain her favour. Being unfortu-nately repulsed, he soon grew violent, and at one time, he muttered a hint of employing force if he should find en-treaty of no avail. Elizabeth and her mother were so well acquainted with the course of war, that they were greatthe course of war, that they were great-ly alarmed by this threat, altho' they still hoped military discipline possess-ed sufficient authority to prevent a subaltern putting such a threat in exe-cution.

Baum became more importunate daily, but Elizabeth remained the same as at first. Concluding at last that she would never be won over to his purpose, he resolved to remove her to purpose, he resolved to remove ner to some place where she would be com-pletely in his power, and where he would be beyond the cognizance of his superiors. With this view he sought and obtained permission to select twen-ty men, and keep a watch over the adjacent country. He soon conformed those men to his designs, by persuading them that Mrs Gardiner had a large quantity of specie concealed in het house, and promised to divide it among them as a reward for their service. Having gained this point, he device. Having gained this point, he devoted an entire day to the discovery of a situation suited to the purpose. He bent his course up the Delaware, for some miles, when he arrived at the opposite cliffs, described in the commencement of my narrative. The Pennsylvania side seemed most secure, and he therefore crossed the river. He and he therefore crossed the river. He then divided his men, and dispatched them up and down along the shore, in quest of a proper place of concealment. quest of a proper place of concealment. In the mean time, he ascended with some difficulty the jutting crass, and was delightfully surprised on finding, about half way from the ground to the top of the cliff, a fine spacious cave, extending backward into the rocks nearly twenty feet. The entrance was almost entirely discurred by a wild being the second of the control of th almost entirely obscured by a wild briar that sprung up from the earth in a cre-vice, and climbing from point to point spread its bare twigs thickly around, It was precisely appropriate. He re-turned to the opening immediately, and by the preconcerted signal of the shrill sounding fife, recalled Then, crossing the river, he marched hack to Trentum.
