The following Russian troops have been reported by the London Standard. On the 5th of April, 1855, the Russian troops were reported to be in the neighborhood of Burgas, 4000 infantry and about 1000 cavalry, attacked at day-break, the entrenched hill situated in the vicinity of Sizopolis, and which was defended in the most gallant manner by Major Ledodon, at the head of the second battalion of the Azov Regiment. The attack of the Turks was dreadful. Eight pieces of artillery poured a destructive fire of canister shot upon the assailants, and were supported by a well directed fire of grenades and musketry; notwithstanding which, an officer of regular Turkish infantry, belonging to Hussein Pacha's suite, succeeded together with three other Turks, in climbing the breast-work, and entering the trench, where they were pierced by innumerable wounds. At the moment of the first alarm, the troops of the garrison of Sizopolis assembled on the place d'armes, in front of the fortress, with admirable promptitude, and were sent against the enemy, by General Wachtel, in the following order:—Two battalions of the Kamshatka Regiment marched to the right, and two battalions of the Ukrania Regiment to the left of the trench. The General himself, at the head of the first battalion of the Kamshatka Regiment, supported by two light field pieces, and by the Dniepropolsk Regiment attacked the right flank of the enemy at the moment that the latter were vigorously assailing the gate of the trench. All these troops advanced, with their drums beating, and rushed with loud hurra upon the Turks, who, attacked on every side, and exposed to the most destructive fire, were completely routed and driven in the utmost confusion from the field. They were pursued to the distant heights, where they sought the shelter of a wood, and from thence made good their retreat to Burgas. During this attack, our gun boats, stationed on our right wing, were not idle. The loss of the enemy must have been considerable; for independent of a number of killed and wounded that the Turkish cavalry succeeded in carrying away, 251 remained dead upon the glacis and along the line of their retreat. Five prisoners were taken. Our loss amounts to 27 non-commissioned officers and privates, killed; and 1 staff officer, 5 officers and 67 non-commissioned officers and privates, wounded. Major General Wachtel received a contusion on his foot from a spent ball.

On the 17th of April, 1855, Orders have been sent to Sebastopol to send 4000 men to Poti, to reinforce the Russians in Asia. The Turks in Asia are said to have received considerable reinforcements. Admiral Greig sailed on the 13th to Sebastopol, whence he will put to sea with the fleet, the destination of which is not known. An immense magazine is to be built on the 15th of July, at the expense of the Crown as a depot for all the supplies of the army. We expect here 300 camels for the service of the army. Constantinople, April 12. Redschid Pacha arrived at Shumla on the 5th of March, and great reinforcements from Bosnia, Albania, and Macedonia, are expected there. From Asia troops are continually passing through Constantinople to the army in Bulgaria, where, it is said, the Turks will soon resume the offensive. Hussein Pacha has orders to do every thing to drive the Russians from Sizopolis, where they have thrown works to defend this important position (in which they have a garrison of 5000 men). GREECE. The town of Lepanto has been surrendered to the Greeks, and the siege of Missolonghi is to be pressed with vigour. One account states that the garrison of the latter has offered to capitulate. The Florence Gazette states, from private letters, that the Greeks had declared the whole coast occupied by the Turks, from Missolonghi to Mucro, in a state of blockade. The Russians continue strictly to blockade Candia. Letters from Malta, received at Leghorn, April 22, announce that Admiral Malcolm left that island on the 1st April, with his whole squadron, for Naples, where he will take on board the French and English Ambassadors, and convey them to Constantinople. The Russian men-of-war lately at Malta, had sailed for the Archipelago. Decree.—We, the by Grace of God, Nicholas I, Emperor of all the Russias, King of Poland, &c. In what light such an operation would be viewed by the other great powers of Europe, is a question to which we do not presume to give any answer. HAVANA, May 8. It is reported in Havana that the new Emperor intends to abolish the celibacy of the clergy.

Paris, May 13.—It seems that the Congress at Rome is seriously thought of. The exclusion of the Prince de Carignan from the succession to the throne of Sardinia is, probably, one of the objects of this assembly; and what part will France play on so serious an occasion; which might lead to a war on one of her frontiers.—For it cannot remain of tranquil spectators of intrigues which would call to the throne a Prince allied to a family which has already acquired too much influence in Europe. LONDON, May 13. The preparations of the belligerents are of the largest kind, ample preparations have been made in every department, vast armies collected, animated with equal confidence, and led on by the most experienced Generals. Yet we are still to learn why Russia, not proposing either conquest or dismemberment, should continue the war at such risk and cost of treasure and of blood; or why Turkey should decline expressing a desire for peace, which the events of the last campaign placed her in a condition to make it without dishonour. All are on the alert upon the Danube from Sillistria, to Widdin. The Turks, according to our letters from Wallachia, have two fortified camps near Gurgeev and Sillistria. They are defended by 17,000 men each. On the 11th of April they made an attack upon the Russians at or near Trato, but without success; tho' if we may form any judgment from the number of wounded sent to Bucharest, the conflict was a sanguinary one. Redschid Pacha has repaired to the camp at Chumla, whither reinforcements are proceeding from all parts of the Turkish empire. Meanwhile Hussein Pacha has received orders to make every effort to drive the Russians from their strong position at Sizopolis. The attack which the Russians made upon the Turks at Achiolji, between Mesambri and Bourgas was not very successful. The object of the Russians is to get possession of the coast from Cape Emmench to Cape Cori, in order to carry on operations to the South of the Balkan, whilst Chumla is kept in check by the troops from the Danube and the garrison of Varna. Whether the Russians will send their main army towards Chumla, whilst they undertake the sieges of Sillistria and Gurgeev, is not yet known. In the mean time orders have been received at Odessa for 4000 men to proceed from Sebastopol upon a secret expedition. In Asia the Turks have opened the campaign with some partial success on the Kur. We have not yet heard of any movements on the part of the Persians to justify the speculations in the Constantinople articles of the 13th of March, and great reinforcements from the Persian government had no hand in it, but that it expressed great abhorrence, and a desire to afford the fullest satisfaction. The conduct of the British Legation is highly, and of course, justly spoken of in this unhappy affair. The Russians in the Mediterranean, by accounts received at Lloyd's, have extended the blockade of the Dardanelles to the Gulf of Contessa, including the Gulf of Ligos and the port of Enoes. As far as we have been able to ascertain the fact, the Russian blockade has not effectually prevented supplies of provisions from being conveyed to Constantinople, though the Russian squadrons are very numerous. But perhaps it has other objects, in view that the mere blockade of the Dardanelles is not sufficient to connect its operations with those of Admiral Greig, from the Black sea, and, if strong forces should be landed on the coast southward of Burgas, might attempt to force the passage of the Dardanelles and blockade Constantinople, by sea. In what light such an operation would be viewed by the other great powers of Europe, is a question to which we do not presume to give any answer. HAVANA, May 8. It is reported in Havana that the new Emperor intends to abolish the celibacy of the clergy.
