HYMENEAL. Married, in this city, on Tuesday morning last by the Rev. John G. Blanchard, Dr. ALVRED JONES, of Queen-Anne's reputy, to Miss Eliza Gassawar, of this city.

For the Maryland Gazille MARYLAND, No. 2 PROSCRIPTION. It is well for the administration of General Jackson, that proscription is the chief accussation is the trought against it, and that accu-sation is thildish in the extreme! ever the re-moved, if they were high-minded men, would scorn to complaint may, high-minded men would scorn to serve under a president whose election they so warmly election they so warmly opposed, and which they deprecated as a curse to the country, as hey deprecated as a curse to the country, as even worse than "war, pestilence and famine."

The president and his administration, are

The president and his auministration, are responsible to the people for their actions, and the people have entrusted to him and to them the power to select fit and proper agents in whom they have full and perfect confidence. to carry on the various operations of govern-

And how little would it avail the president, And now lettle would it avail the president, was he at some future day to tell the people, in answer to their complaints, "true, your affairs have not been properly managed, but I continued the same men in office whom I found there when I was elected; they had been selected by my predecessors; they had been long in service; they had wives and children, and surely you did not expect me to remove them, and to have a hue and cry of "Proscription!

Proscription!" raised against me? This would not await him. The people would reply, and reply indignantly, "are elected you to reform abuses in the government, so far as it was in your power, but you have connied at those very abuses by keeping the authors of them in uffice. You are more to less at these them in office. You are more to blame than they are; they had lost our confidence long ago; and vet you continued them in power. had not any right to do so, to the manifest injury of your country; and as we have the power to punish even a president, because you have not removed those unprofitable and unworthy servants, we will remove you."

It was the president's bounden duty, therefore, to make removals in all cases where, in his opinion, the public good required him so to do, and public opinion will sustain him in the course he has pursued; nay, it is the public opinion that he has not yet gone far enough in the work of removals and reformation. The removed may rave, a factious opposition may raise a clamour against the president, and attempt to mislead and deceive the peopic, but the people are too enlightened to be misled or deceived—they elected Jackson president, and they will sustain him, and sus tain him nobly. And this proscription—what is it? What is this proscription which has been sounded by the trumpet of opposition in the senate chamber, in the representatives the senate chamber, in the representations hall, and through the numerous presses which are ranged in political array against the administration? What is this terrible proscripfion which has alarmed even the women and children in our peaceful villages? This pro-scription, when it comes to be fairly examined, will be found not only justifiable, but even absolutely necessary; it will be found to have been called for and expected by the people, and without it. Jackson's election would have een vain, and worse than vain. Without removals from office, there could not have been reform; and but for an expected reform of abuses, the people would not have felt so much interest as they did, in the election of Jack-A removal from office then, of an unworthy incumbent, of a political partizan, who ne-glected his duties, to aid the cause of some as-piring and ambitious man, is, in the language of the present day. called 'Proscription!' But for whom were these very offices created) They were created for the public good; the vere not intended to be entailed, or held in fee simple by the incumbents, no well placed on far higher ground than the repre-sentatives of the people, who have every year or too to come before the public, and have their character and conduct strictly and set their character and conduct strictly and set verely sorufinized. The president himself has to pass through the fiery ordeal once in every four years; and it would be strange it would be passing stranger if these subordinate officers were to be placed beyond control, and made as independent as judges.

But are our public officers not to be permitted to enjoy freedom of sentiment? mest certainly; the most perfect freedom of sentiment.

Yet, after they accept a public station from government, it is not expected that they are to become political partizans; for the very, power they hold, gives them a patronage, gives them an influence; and if this is wielded in behalf of any particular candidate, or of any particular very. particular party, they ought to be content-like other people, to rise or fall with their fa-vourites. One single public officer may have influence enough to decide an election in a county or city, that county or city may decide the election in a state, and that state may de-cide the election of president. We have sten it more than once in Maryland, when a single. it more than once in Maryland, when a single vote decided a county elections we have sent it in Maryland, when on a single vote depended the political character of the house of delegates. We have seen it in Marylands when on a single vote in joint hallot of both houses, depended the choice of governor and council, and consequently thappear to fill two or three theusand offices in the state and we have varied that the state and we have varied to state and single vote or one makes an expension as single vote or one makes an expension as SINGER VOTE OF MEMBER OF COME Public officers are freemens out jet them not
