This Surgical instrument is now so well known to the Medical profession, and so extensivly used by unfortunate sufferers labouring under the disease of Hernia, that a particular account of its mechanical construction of its surgical effects is thought unnecessary.—

Samuel Ackerly, M. This evil was not fully remedied until Dr. Amos G. Hull, of New York, turned his attention to the subject, and by his improvement in the construction of trus-ses, has rendered it certain that all recent rup tures and those of children, may be permanent-ly cured, and those of old people and of long tanding, may, in many cases, also be reme lied. The pad of Dr. Hull's Truss i and not convex; and hence the raised circular margin, by proper adaptation, presses upor the sides of the hernial opening, and tends to close the aperture and cure the hernial.

PROSPECTUS Series of Standard Works Protestant Episcopal Church

UNITED STATES; N. Y. PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL PRESS

REV. WM. R. WITTINGHAM, A.M.

The second presentation of this design to the Epis The second presentation of this design to the Episcopal public, is owing to no want of encouragement, or anticipation of difficulty in its accomplishment. A considerable delay in the execution of the former proposals, deemed necessary for the maturing of the original design, and for saccrtaining exactly the nature of the wants which the publication is intended to supply, left the Trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Press, free to alter, and, if circumstances should warrant, to enlarge their plan. Communications from several quarters, and from the most respectable sources, produced by this delay, have led to the conviction, upon which the Trustees now propose to activate a plan far more comprehensive than that first presented, is called for by our Church in this country. A mere republication of works of English and American divines was then contemplated. It is now intended, by the introduction of every thing necessary to adapt the works selected to the circumstances of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, to give the publication the character of an original work, and, at the same time, to extend its design so far as to embrace the works of the primitive Christian writers, and if occasion present itself, of foreign disines.

THE BEGGAR.

THE BEGGAR.

A few weeks since a menticant appeared in our village, pale and emaciated, and convulsed with apasmolic affliction, brought on to all appearance by an irritation of mounds received in the battles of our independence. The many and deep scars with which his skull, and breast, and arms, were disfigured, evinced that the tragedy of the revolution had been to him no bloodless drama. He asked not for the means to pamper appetite. His face bespoke him an honest and a temperate man. He begged only for himmity's sake, a pittance to support nature till he could reach his few surviving friends, further north. It was an affecting sight to see an old man—a veteran of that sacred war, (in which he lost three sons, begging an alms to aid him on to the spot, where, in a wretched hovel, which he callschis own, he might put up his last prayer for his ungrateful country, cover his face with his tattered mantle, and die.

And thou hast seen, thou say'st, old man,

And thou hast seen, thou say'st, old man, The Lion in his ire; When from his strain'd and blood-shot eye, Flash'd out vindictive fire.

And thos hast heard, old man, thou say'sr,
The terror of his roar,
That echo'd mid our mountain rocks,
And rang along our shore.

And thou hast stood inblenchingly,
His griely front before—
When carnage way'd her dripping wing,
And drench'd the earth with gore. God help thee, father, for the world

Is pitiless and cold -It sheltereth not the shelterless. Revereth not the old Ay, it can gaze upon the front,

That battle's stamp hath seal'd; And leave unfill'd the wither'd hand, Too weak its blade to wield.

Why left they not thy well'ring corse, On Bunker's smoking steep— When thro! thy brow the death shot plough'd. That furrow broad and deep? Or why on Yorktown's crimson plain Didst thou not yield thy breath?
Far better had that bloody sleep

From "Stories of Waterloo." THE TALL MAJOR'S STORY. Bless my heart! Stopped payment?-HOLCHOFT In the middle of the main street of Castlebar there still stands a low two storied house. Its external is sadly changed for the worse; a huge crop of dank grass covers the load of rotten thatch, which has been accumulated for a century, and the lower portion of the hall door has disappeared, thus affording the pig a comfortable communication with the interior. The respective inhabitants (for every chamber is tenanted with an interesting sample of the six millions,) have displayed great ingenuity in counteracting the numerous assaults committed upon the casements by the storm, and fully bear out the proud hoast of the progeny of the Emerald Isle, that the resources of "the Gem of

I well remember the morning in which the post brought my appointment. My aunt (she's gone the way of all flesh, God be good to her!) twitchod me on the elbow, and I dutifully followed her to her chamber. The door was carefully closed—a key, with great deliberation, drawn from the inner partition of her pocket formy aunt's was a double one. "Dennis, my darling boy, you are going into the world, and have taken to an honourable calling, becoming one of your name, and mercoverous to nearly connected with the O'Tooles;" my aunt was an O'Toole—'keep yourself clean, and let no man tread keep yourself clean, and let no man tread upon your corns, as was my poor uncle's parting advice to my brother Phelim, who died a full Major in the Irish Brigade.— Here; and she extracted a small paper from a compartment of her housewife—'take this to the bank, and the Lord be with you!' She wiped her eyes with the corner of her figured apron. Don't be cast down my dear boy: we were always a lucky family; and I hope to live to see you return like Colonei O'Callaghan, with your wooden leg and twelve and say peners day.

My anni's present was an order to Con Carney lor tweaty pounds, and I proceeded to the bank.

ter, which separated him from the customers sat a one-eyed clerk, with a pen behind his ear, telling over a bundle of shilling notes, which Con, from a scarcity of change, had put in circulation. I presented my order. Luke Lynch directed his solitary optic at the paper, and perceiving it was a weighty transfer, pointed to the inner door, and I was speedily in the presence of the man of money Wealth and gout are said to be inseparable companions; and how should Con Carney escape? There he sat-a short punchy man, his infirm foot implicated with divers rolls of flannel, resting on a low cushion. On the table stood a pewter ink-stand, with its Eagle's quill; and the large dog-eared account book, for Con knew nothing of your double entry system-was lying open before him.

Con was in prodigious credit; his shilling notes passed current as the King's own coin. The private purse of every thrifty matron in the parish was considered insecure until confided in his custody; and there was not an old maid for miles around who did not keep an account in the bank of Castlebar. The small farmer requested, as a particular favour, that he would take charge of a trifle of money to portion the little girl off,' and the priest himself had been found, more than closeted with the banker; and mos auspiciously so, just after the Easter and Christmas dues had been collected.

But there were others besides depositors, who sought the domicile of Constantine Carney. He was blessed with three thumping daughters, and many a lover sighed in the little left hand parlour. From the crowd of competitors for her fair hand, Patsey Blake bore the bell, and led Sibby Carney blushing to the hymeneal alar. Patsey's patri ony had been cruelly disorganised; but things soon altered for the better-debts were discharged or liquidated -the old house was newly rougheast, and put on a fresh and nunty air; and Cloghawn Muck-the designation of the mansion—and which being in-terpreted, the 'pig.' stepping stanes,' was voted vulgar, and Castle Muck substituted in its place.

Nor did the prosperity of Patsey Blake pass unnoticed in the neighbourhood. Sally Carney, the second of the graces, was besieged by beaux; and never did desperate uitors go more desperate lengths since the days of Penelope. God knows how matters night have ended, when, in the nick of time, who should arrive to recruit, but Lieutenant Corcoran, of the 18th Royal Irish. Lieutenant was a bold man; numbers did not leter him him, and he determined to call he gentle Sally his or perish. He took the field immediately—politely intimating that any attention to Miss Carney would be considered by him personal; and finding, notwithstanding, that Philip O'Flaherty, Esq. persevered in being civil, he requested the onour of that gentleman's company one blessed morning, to the race course, and winged him, the said Philip, in a workmanlike style, as was fully attested by a large and impartial assemblage. Miss Sally Car ney, to prevent farther effusion of blood, surrendered at discretion, and Lieutenant Corcoran appeared shortly in the gazette,

I joined my regiment. Time rolled on. My small remittances from Mayo showed me that my friend Con was still alive and merry; for these subsidies generally reached the shape of a bill on London, and Con Carney—oh! what an autograph it was! usually sprawled across it, either before or behind, with a large splash beneath, and as many concentric circles as the hooker of an saving banks; bur what are they to Con Carindian resident. Notices of Con and his famil were frequent in the elaborate epistles of my aunt O'Toole. I found she had, on a certain day taken an airing in the Castle Muck carriage—that Mrs. Major Coreoran had been safely delivered of twins—that nationen safety delivered of twins—inat Miss Biddy, the youngest, had had her name changed to Sophia—and that the Carney family were sorely perplexed—Con to employ excessive capital, and Biddy, alias Sophia, to dispose of accumulating admirers.
