MISCELLÀNEOUS.

Fron Summer and Winter Hours - by H. G. BELL. THE UNCLE.

I had an nucle once—a man
Of threescore years and three—
And when my reason's dawn began,
He'd take me on his knee,
And often talk whole winter nights,
Things that seemed strange to me. Times that seemed strange to me.
He was a man of gloomy mood,
And few his converse sought;
But it was tail in solitude
His conscience with him wrought,
And there before his mental eye,
Some hideous vision brought.

Some nuterous vision brought.
There was not one in all the house
Who did not fear his frown,
Save I, a little careless child,
Who gambol'd up and down,
And often peep'd into his room,
And pluck'd him by the gown,

I was an orphan and alone— My father was his brother, And all their lives I knew that they
Had fordly lov'd each other;
And in my uncle's room there hung The picture of my mother.

There was curtain over it,

There was curtain over it,

Twas in a darken'd place,
And few or none had ever look'd.

Upon my mother's face,

Or seen her pale expressive smile Of melancholy grace.

On night, I do remember well—
The wind was how ling high,
And through the ancient corrilors
It seemed desarite—
I sat and read in that old hall, I read, but little undertood

The words upon the book.
Ter with a side-long glance I mark'd.
My uncle's fearful look.
And saw how all his quiv'ring frame. With strong convulsions shook. A silent terror o'er me stole,
A strange unusual dread,
His lips were white as bone, his eyes
Sunk fer down in his head;
He gaz'd on me, but 'twas the gaze
Of the unconscious dead.

Then middenly be turn'd himround,
And drew saide the veil
That hung before my mother's face—
Perchance my even might fail.
But ne'er before that face to mo Had seem'd so ghastly pale.

"Come hither boy!" my uncle said— I started at the sound, "Twas choked and stifled in his throat, And hardly atterance found—
"Come hither boy!" then fearfully
He cast his eyes around.

That lady was thy mother once.
Then werther only child—
O God! I've seen her when she held.
Thee in her arms and smiled:
She smil'd upon thy father:—hov.
'Twas that which drove me wild!

'Twas that which drove me wild!

'I'lle was my brother; but his form
Was fairer far then mine;
I guidged not that,—he was the prop
Of our ancestral line,
And menly beauty was to him
A token and a sign.

'Doy! I had lov'd her too,—my more
'Twas I who lov'd her first
Tor months—for years—the golden thought
Within my coul was nurst;
He came—he conquer'd—they were wed—
My air-blown bubble buird!

(Then of my mind a shadow fell.

my air-blown bundle burst:
"Then on my mind a shadow fell,
And evil beness graw rife.
The damning shought stuck in my heart,
And cut me like a knife.
That she, whom all the days I lov'd,
Should be another's wife!

By Hearen' it was a fearful thing
To see my brother now.
And mark the placid calm which sat
Forever on his brow.
That seemed in biter scorn to say,
"I am more lov'd than thou!" "I left my home -I left the land, -In vain, in vain-where er I turned,

My member went with mer
My whole existence night and day
In memory seemed to be-In memory seemed to see "I came again, I found them here Thou'rt like thy father boy, --He doted on that pale face there:
I've seen them kiss and toy.
I've seen him lock'd in her fond arms
Wespt in delirious joy.

Went in definious joy.

"He dissphear'd—Iraw nearer, child—
He dised—no one knew how;
The murder'd body ne'er was found;
The tale is hush'd up new;
Int there was one who rightly gress'd
The hand that struck the blow.

The mang that struck the order.

"It drove her mad, yet not his death—
Notimed his death alone.
For she had climp to hope when all
Endw well that there was none;
No, hoy it was a sight she saw
That froze her into store.

"I am thy uncle child, why stare So frightfully aghast". The area moves, but know'st thou not "Tis nothing but the blast; I too have hid my flore like these; ..., But such value for many past;
