TO THE SIAMESE TWINS.

TO THE SIAMESE TWING.

Mysterious the by the Hand above, which nothing below must part!
Thou visible image of faithful love—
Firm unlon of heart and leart—
The mind to her utmost bound may run,
And summen her light in vain.
To seen the twent that must still be one—
The one that will still be twain?

The one that will still be twain?
The best of this bosom for bears to reach
Where the other distinctly goes;
Yet, the stream that impurples the reins of any
Through the breast of his brother flows?
One grief must be felt by this two-fold mark,
As the prints of a double tlart,
In the joy lit up by a single spark
Is sonshine in either heart.

6, monder to baffle poor human skill in clay of the human mould! But, a greater mystery all must still, in the union of souls, behold. In the union of souts, nenotic.
Ye are living harps, by your silken strings.
In a heavenly concord bound:
And who o'er one but a finger tlings.
Awakens you both to sound.

That ye were samiler thrown?

And how did we feel at the severing stroke.

When both were forever alone?

When both were forever alone?

Now would not think of vontselves apart,
keen in fancy's wiklest mond,
for, each would seem hot a broken heart,
And the world a solitude?
Pear youths, may your lives he a flowery way,
And watched by your Maker's eye!
May both, at the close, one call obey
To shine as twin stars on high!

PRISON SCENES. The heavy portals closed on mr. I heard a rattlings of chains and the step of the ractings of chains and the step of the rakey retreating. The dampness and gloom the dismal walls curdled my very soul. I is the dismat waits curdled my very soul. I was a prisoner, thrust in among thieves, pi-ntes, murderers, and brutal wretches of eve-y description. The tenderness of a woman ble into my heart, and I sat down on a brokee bench in a shadowy nosk, and covering by face with my hands, suffered the large hot ny face with my hands, suffered the large hot lears to swell up and gush out freely. As the night advanced, the keeper come to me. He was a huge man, with the look of a brute. Every vile bad passion seemed to have added an expression to his scoundrel face. His even were small and of a greenish gray, a pointed looked nose, enormous whiskers, and bilious billow completion. ow complexion, were set off with a frown, ich constant bullying among the wretche ander his charge had deepened into a perma-tent scowl of cruelty and hatred. He had the most disagreeable voice I ever heard. It re-embled the discordant cry of a savinge bird of prey, and always made me shudder. His alutation was suited to his appearance. "Here, clear out from there," he said with The blood mounted into my temples. with passion that was painful. I raised my arm strike, when he cut me on the head with a whalebone whip, and screamed out for a guard, who grasped me with an iron hand by the fooder, and almost lifted me from my feet. Lording me with every epithet of insult, the keeper struck me again with his atick, while the soldier held me with the strength of a gillar, and the next moment I found myself lying at full-length on the stone floor of a narrow cell, in which I perceived I was locked for the night. A faint light shone in through a grated window, and discovered two straw halebone whip, and screamed out for a guard. , and discovered two straw the only furniture, on one of which sat | unles other figure. He was motionless as a staenother figure. He was motionies as a sature, and in the confusion of the moment I varcely knew whether it was an apparition renjured up by my excited fancy, or a figure hewn out of granite, or a human being and wretched prisonerlike myself. I looked athin with a fearful interest. He was of a colossal size. An expression of fixed and stern despair was in his rough and savage face; and seated on the powerent his cheek and temple rested on the outsprend palm of his brawny hand. He did not even look at me, although the manner in which I was hurled into the apartment was sufficiently abrupt to have at least excited the notice of any ordinary person. There was a dead silence for a minute, during which he sat gazing steadily at the varrow piece of sky visible through the small barred window.—There was something in his ue, and in the confusion of the moment I

(Who are you?" I exclaimed, in a whisperyo low that I scarcely-knew whether it was nove than my own thought, but it sounded distinctly through the deep hush of the dungeon, and he allowly turned his large fierce eyes upon mise. As be moved, too, there was a rattling of chains and I perceived that he was heavily fettered by manacles, which
