> A HIGHLAND ANECDOTE. BY SIR WALTER SCOTT. BAR'T.

The same course of reflection which le to transmit to you the account of the of an ancient bur near, induces me to the particulars of a singular incident, a ing a point which seems bighty qualifi-be illustrated by the noncil. It was sug of by the spirited engraving of the (Huntsman, which adorned the first no of your work, and perhaps hears too cl resemblance to the character of viat to admit of your choosing it as a subject another. Of this you are the only co tent judge:

The story is an old, but not an ancient the actor and sufferer was not a very man, when I hear! the anecdote in my ly youth. Duncal, for so I shall call had been engaged in the affair of 1746, others of his class, and was supposed, by ny, to have been an accomplice, if no principal actor, in a certain tragic is which made much boise a good many after the rebellion. I am content with cating this, in order to give some idea of man's character, which was bold, fierce inan's character, which was both, herce enterprising. I races of this natural disition still remained on Dancan's very features, and in his keen grey eye. But limbs, like those of the aged borderer in former tale, had become anable to serve purposes, and obey the dictates, of his it nation. On the one side of his body he tained the proportions and firmness of an tive mountaineer; on the other he was a tive mountaineer; on the other he was a abled cripple, scarce able to limp along streets. The cause which reduced him this state of infirmity was singular:

Twenty years or more before I knew B can, he assisted his brothers in forming a lacan, the highly sold a comprehending grazingt in the highlands, comprehending extensive range of mountain and forest, h morass, take and precipice, It chanced t and Duncar, not satisfied with despatch his shepherds in one direction, went him in quest of the fugitive in another. In the course of his researches, he was duced to ascend a small and narrow pr leading to the top of a high precip.

Dangerous as it was at first, the road beca denbly to as he advanced. It was not me more than two feet broad, so rugged and a ficult, and, at the same time, so terrible, t it would have been impracticable to any the dight step and steady brain of a highl der. The precipide on the right rose like wall, and on the left annk to a depth which was giddy to look down upon; but Bun passed cheerfully on, now whatling the thering of the Clan, now taking heed to footsteps; when the difficulties of the particularly required caution.

passed theertuny when the difficulties of the footness, when the difficulties of the particularly required casillon.

In this manner he had more than half canded the precipice, when it midway it might almost be said, in middlist air, countered a buck of the red deer apoid ning down the cliff by the asing path opposite direction. If Duncan had had no remounter could have been more are but as he had not this advantage over the nizer of the widerness, the electing set by had the power of retreating, for the step had not the advantage over the nizer of the widerness, the electing set by had the power of retreating for the step had not before, and of the purchase of the widerness, the electing set by had the power of retreating for the step had not the advantage over the nizer of the widerness, the electing set by had the power of retreating for the step had not the advantage of the step had not the advantage of the country. This greater ratio of increase of a step had not had all the property and in the keepsake for 1802 and D. S. Tel.
