BY SIR WALTER SCOTT. BAR'T. The same course of refliction which le to transmit to you the account of the of an ancient bor never, biduces me to the particulars of a singular incident, a log a point which seems highly qualificated by the pencil. It was sur ed by the sprinted engraving of the (Huntsman, which adorned the first no of your work, and perhaps bears too el resemblance to the character of Cut to admit of your choosing it as a subject another. Of this you are the only co tent judge:

The story is an old, but not an ancient the story is an one, out not an ancient the actor and sufferer was not a very man, when I heard the anecdote in my ly youth. Duncat, for so I shall call had been engaged in the affirm of 1745, others of nie class, and was supposed, by others of his class, and was supposed, or ny, to have been an accomplice, if no principal actor, in a certain tragic is which made much soise a good many after the rebellion. I am content with cating this, in order to give some idea of man's character, which was bold, fierce enterprising.—I races of this natural distition still remained on Dancan's very features, and in his keen grey eye. But limbs, the those of the aged borderer in former tale, had become unable to serve former tale, had become anable to serve purposes, and obey the dictates, of his in nation. On the one side of his body he tained the proportions and firmness of an tive mountaineer; on the other he was a abled cripple, scarce able to limp along streets. The cause which reduced him this state of infinity was singular:

Twenty years or more before I knew D can, he assisted his brothers in forming a la grazingt in the highlands, comprehending extensive range of mountain and forest, morass, lake and precipice, It chanced t a sheep or goat was missed from the flo and Dancar, not satisfied with despatch his shepherds in one direction, went him in quest of the fugitive in another. In the course of his researches, he was duced to ascend a small and narrow pr leading to the top of a high precip.

Dangerous as it was at first, the road beca denbly to as he advanced. It was not me more than two feet broad, so rugged and i ficult, and, at the same time, so terrible, if the same time, so terrible, if it would have been impracticable to any the light step and steady brain of a highlight. The precipide on the right rose like wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which wall, and on the left sunk to a depth which is the sunk to In this manner he had more than ha

In this manner he had more than had canded the precipice, when, in midway it might almost be said, in midlis air, countered a buck of the red deer apecie ning down the cliff by the saine path, opposite direction. If Duncan had had no remontre could have been more agree but as he had not this advantage over the nizer of the wildernest, the meeting that he power of retreating, for the stag had not toom to tare himsels in the harrow path, and if Duncan had turned his back to go deven he know enough of the reteature's habits to be certain that he would stath spoor him while engaged in the difficulty of the greature. They stood, therefore, perfectly still, and the keepsake for 1828.—Edi. U. S. Tel.
