

NOT AT HOME.

Mrs. Tallman called the other day to see her particular friend, Mrs. Long. They had long been friends—old friends—friends of whom you could believe, the honied speeches they made to each other, and the bonied kisses they never failed to inflict on each other's lips every time they met. Nevertheless it would frequently happen, that neither of them would be at home when the other called.

This sort of absence is no doubt consistent with the purest friendship, and with the most unflinching regard to truth; for it is next to impossible that a fashionable lady should at all times be at home, even to her friends; and as to sacred truth in these little affairs, why, surely every lady must be her own best judge whether she is at home or not.

Well, as we were saying, Mrs. Tallman called to see her excellent friend, Mrs. Long. The bell was answered by an Irish servant. 'Is Mrs. Long at home?' 'No ma'am, she is not at home!' 'Are you certain of it?' 'Inclate, ma'am, I'm ve' positive.'

'I wish particularly to see her this morning.' 'I'm under the necessity of informing ye, am'an'—(with a bow and a scrape)—that she's not to be seen.' 'I wouldn't wish to dispute your word; but if I mistake not, I saw her face through the window as I came up.'

'Beggan yer pardon, ma'am, that couldn't have been Mrs. Long's face no how at all—for she just told me with her own mouth that she was not at home.'

'I should be loth to dispute your word and your mistress's too; but really, under the present circumstances—'

'Why, sure, as you say, ma'am, circumstances alter cases; and therefore, by your leave, I'll just step in an ax Mrs. Long if she's convenient to be at home at all this morning, to a particular friend of her own, that wouldn't believe a word she says.'

Mrs. Tallman, resolving, on this occasion, not to be deterred and put off by her very dear friend, pushed forward after the servant, and presently found herself in the arms of Mrs. Long, who was overjoyed to see her.

'My dear Mrs. Tallman!' she exclaimed, 'where have you kept yourself this long time! It is almost an age since I saw you. You have been quite unaccountably late. Why haven't you called before?'

'I have called repeatedly, Mrs. Long, but you were not at home. Indeed, your servant told me the same thing this morning—but—'

'Servants are such a plague!' exclaimed Mrs. Long, with great indignation—they never do as you want to have them. And then they make so many mistakes—especially these Irish chloppers—and there's no getting any other servants now a days. That body of mine—I've a great mind to dismiss him as ever I had to eat—but dear Mrs. Tallman, do take off your bonnet, and stay a while. I'm so glad to see you! How is Mr. Tallman and the little children?'

'They're all very well, except little Tommy—he's got the whooping cough—but he's getting better now.'

'Poor little thing! how sorry I am to hear it! Appropos, Mrs. Tallman, have you heard about the collar-and-mob us being in the city?'

'No, indeed I have not—but I understand it's on its way across the Atlantic—and that Capt. Yardum bespoke a vessel, that heard of another vessel, that was believed to have it on board.'

'That's what I've heard.'

'Well, I shouldn't wonder, if it come here in a very short time. However, thank heaven! there's one comfort—they say it never attacks nobody but the lower classes; and our rank in life, you know, Mrs. Tallman, will secure us. But appropos again—talking of these things—have you heard the news from Congress?'

'I understand the United States Bank is broke in two in the middle; and that the Union is on its last legs.'

'Good-bye, my dear Mrs. Tallman—I do hope you'll call again soon.'

'I shall I shut the door in the face if yer then?'

'Do any thing to keep her out?'

'Oh! by the powers, will I—and I'll trate all yer particular friends in the same delicate way, if you insist upon it. It's fine time, indeed, if a lady of your standing—(a bow and a scrape)—could be absent when she's at home in free country like this same arrah-land—indeed it is?'

The Little Factory Girl, to a more fortunate Playmate.

Recent attempts in the British Parliament to afford to the children in the manufactory legal protection from severity and overworking, have probably excited this poetic appeal in their favour.

I often think how once we used in summer fields to play,
And run about and breathe the air that made us glad and gay;
We used to gather buttercups, and chase the butterfly—
I loved to feel the light breeze lift my hair as it went by!
Do you still ply in those bright fields? and are the flowers still there?
There are no fields where I live now—no flowers any where!
Bet-day by day I go and turn a dull and tedious wheel,
You cannot think how sad, and tired, and faint I often feel!
I hurry home to snatch the meal my mother can supply,
Then back I hasten to the task—that not to hate I try!
At night my mother kisses me, when she has combed my hair,
And laid me in my little bed, but—I'm not happy there—

I dream about the factory, the fines that on us wait—
I start and ask my father if I have not lain too late!
And once I heard him sob and say—"Oh better were a grave,
Than such a life as this for thee, thou little sinless slave!"

From the New York Mirror.
OBADIAH.

"You are a good for nothing lazy rascal," said an exasperated farmer to his son Obadiah Davis. "You have neither watered the horses, nor fed the pigs. There's Sal scolding down stairs, because there's no wood cut for the oven; and you have left the bars of the lane down, and the cow has gone into neighbour Humphrey's field. Get out you lazy, good for nothing loon—out of my sight!"

Mr. Davis was six feet high. Obadiah was not more than five feet three. The last adjectives, with the terminating noun, were rendered much more emphatic by the hearty cuff with which each one were accompanied, and the last explanatory push, which came from a palm of a hand, brawny with fifty years labour, formed a hint not to be mistaken, that the negligent youth's company was no longer wanted.

Obadiah was a lubberly looking fellow, about twenty. He bore the beating with good grace, the necessity of which, frequent experience had inculcated; and without saying a word to his irritated parent, he went down the lane—a neglect of the bars of which, had formed one of the counts in the declaration against him—and ran down on a stone, in a little grove of trees, and by the side of a brook, whose waters swept rapidly over their sandy bed, and filled the air with freshness and music. He ruminated awhile with his hand lip out in a pouting way, which with him as well as others, was a sign of some internal agitation.

"Yes," he exclaimed—for why should not a farmer's boy address the groves and invoke the rural spirits, as well as Tell or Brutus?— "Yes," says Obadiah, drawing the sleeve of his coat across his mouth, with more of a view of comfort than grace; "yes—I'll be darned if I stand this 'ere any more. I can't be beat like a dog all my life, and I think I may as well give dad the slip now as any other time. I'll tell him on't. If he's a mind to give me a tige, so much the better—if he an't, why he may let it alone."

It was about two days after the preceding events, that Mr. Davis was surprised at the appearance of his son, apparently equipped for a journey. He stared at him a moment, partly silent from displeasure, and partly from surprise. "Well, father," said Obadiah, with some hesitation, "I'm come to bid you good bye." "To bid me good bye, you fool! Why, where are you going?" "I'm going to seek my fortune in the world, father. I know I am of no use to you. I think I can do as well as well anywhere else. I can't do much worse, at all events. So I am going down to York, or somewhere thereabouts, to get along by myself." "Warm and deep feelings, thank heaven, are not confined to the wealthy nor the wise; and nature fashions her humblest hearts, as rich in strong and delicious affections, as those which beat beneath flashing stars. Mr. Davis loved his son for many reasons. He was the only pledge of one who had stirred up the romance of earlier feelings, and whom now the green God covered; and Obadiah, ordinary as was his general appearance, sometimes turned up on him with an expression of eye, or replica in mirth with a smile, which recalled her to his memory, and found no where else in the wide world. Besides, he was always honest and affectionate; and though he never discovered that kind of activity which might have
