[Continued from First Page.] eture for the purpose of finding the spot described by Carraira wife, and unsintering the remainder of the fewels. The first energy was fruitless, and he was obliged to return to obtain a more accurate description of the place. The heatile relations existing between Holland and Belgium renders that justneys both difficult and dangerous. and on one occasion he narrowly escaped being killed by the broad sword of a Belgian soldiet. (On his second visit to Brussels, he was so confident that he had discovered the of those suns, attended by ten incomand times spot he made a purchase of the ground, alten thousand worlds, all in rapid motion, yet leging that he wan'ed it for agricultural purchase, regular and harmonions, invariably poses, and erecting a large sharty over that the ten of the paths prescribed to them, and there worlds peopled with myriads of intelliging the paths of the p find the property. He then commenced dig-ging, and, after a few days labour he succeed-which they contain the iron chest in which they extended, would be bold enough to satisfy the delivered the jewels safely into the hands of the Princess, in the presence of all the Royal Yamily. Mr. Raymond being a Frenchman, and speaking the language with great fluency, was enabled to accomplish the ends of his mission, without exciting any suspicion of his real object. He was liberally rewarded by the Prince of Orange for Jis services, and returned to this country design the last agging turned to this country during the last spring, with instructions to conduct Carrara to Holland, in case he should be surrendered to the Dutch Minister by the American government. He fell a victim to the cholera about a month ago, and the younge Hays has therefore been despatched in his place.

Mr. Raymond secretained to his satisfaction that the jeyels were stolen from the chamber of the Princess by Carrara and an accomplice. The accomplice is believed to have been murdered by Carrara, in order to passess himself of the while boots and to possess himself of the whole booty, and to prevent discovery. So large a reward was of-fered by the Datch government for the appre-hension of the thieves and the recovery of the jewels, that Garrara's confidence in the fidelity of his companion was shaken, and knowing that dead men told no tales, he deemed it prudent to pit him in a situation where his dis-closures would not be likely to do him injury.

Rounage was formerly a merchant in New York, and occupied the loft in Davis and Brook's store, in South-street, at the time their store was burned. There were so many circumstances that tended to fix suspicion him as being the incendiary, that he was indicted by the grand jury, and tried for the offence in the Court of General Sessions .-From the deficiency of legal evidence he was not convicted, but there was hardly a doubt but that he was the incendiary. He had a quantity of goods in their store, that were insured for more than their value

The jewels of the Princess were a present from her brother, the Emperor Alexander, at the time of her marriage, and were then valued at nearly a million sterling. When the robbery was first made known, it was believed by many that they had been abstracted by her husband in order to raise money to pay his gambling debts. That impression, it ap-pears, has never been removed, and the Dutch government, in causing Carrara to be convey ed to Holland, are actuated mainly by a desire to wipe off that aspersion from the Prince's character.—Boston Atlas.

was a pleasant evening in the month of May, and my sweet child, my Rosaline, and I had sauntered up to the castle's top to enjoy the breeze that played around it, and to admire the unclouded firmament that glowed and sparkled with unusual lustre from The atmosphere was in its purest and pole. The atmosphere was in its purest and finest state of vision, the milkway was dis-tinctly developed throughout its whole extent; every planet and every star above the horizon, however near and brilliant or distant or faint, lent its lambent light or trinkling ray, to give variety and beauty to the hemisphere; while the round, bright moon (so distinctly defined were the lines of her figure, and so clearly visible even the rotundity of her form,) seemed to hang off from the azure vault, sus-pended in midway air; or stooping forward from the firmament her fair and radiant face, as if to court and return our gaze.

of satellites along the vast ocean of space be-tween us and the fixed stars, and admired the felicity of that design, by which those distant bodies had been parcelled out and arranged into constellations, so as to have served not only for beacons to the ancient havigator, but as it were for land marks to astronomers of this day; enabling them, though in different countries, to indicate to each other with ease the place and motion of these planets, comets, and magnificent meteors which inhabit, re-

Anon, 'mid the blue of the sky Are gushing the splendours of event But the emigrant's desolate eye, Looks through them in sorrow to heaven. Though his bark so triumphantly glides Though his bark so triumphantly kides
O'er the buryant breast of the deep,
And the tones of the tremulous tides
Greet with music the prow diey steep— His bosom the sunbeam and wave.

THE CHOLERA.

To the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Troy.

Gentlemen:—I am one of those among our citizens, who have looked upon our common country, and especially upon our large cities, with a deep interest in relation to that discase which has carried such desolation throthe eastern world; and which has, at length, hade its appearance among us. I need not hade its appearance among us. I need not tell you of its ravages in New York and Albany, or of its actual existence in this city. You are, no doubt, as individuals, and as a body of men, placed in authority for our protection, minute observers of these things -I have not been an insensible, nor an ungrateal spectator of the precautionary means which you have adopted for the defence of our citizens from this sweeping pestilence: and with honesty and cordiality I can add, that in my judgment, you have thus far acted wisely. What you have done has been well done. But there are other measures of safe uone. But there are other measures of safe 13 which are of vital importance, and the a-duption of which lies within the legitimate sphere of your operations; and to these I take the liberty of calling your attention. I ad-dress you through the press, because I wish the community to read and weigh my approximathe community to read and weigh my suggestions; and I give my name to this communi-

In relation to what you have already done, In relation to what you have arready done. I wish to make a remark or two, before I proceed to the grand object of this communication. The Quarantine established on Green Island, was a wise regulation, and especially demanded at the time when it was adopted. My own views of the non-contagious nature of the control of th My own views of the non-contagious nature of the cholera were, at that period; what they are now; but a contrary opinion extensively prevailed; and the fears of the community which bordered upon panic, could, by no other step, have been so effectually advect and controlled. Besides, this measure conferred a special favour on the emigrants them selves, for while it, prayided them food an clothing, and the opportunities for needing ablutions, there is very little doubt but it may have prevented the occarrence of malignan disease in their own tanks. And dat, not least, the course pursued by our foody in relation to the celebration of the 4th of July, was noble in the racter, as I have no doubt it was beneficed in its consequenced. The public stand which you took on that occasion, and the declare reasons of it—a regard to the health of the city—produced a salutary effect.
