Mosley, the landindy of the Eagle and Child, on his being brought back, recollected hearing him say, as he went out, to Miss

Never mind, Mary Ann, our troubles in this life will soon be over, and then we shall be happy in the next.

Medical assistance being immediately sent for from Stratford, Dr. Blliott and his assistant'soon arrived, and although every means were resorted to, in order to save his life, the quantity of laudanum he had taken was too powerful, although the stomach-pump was used within as short a time as possible. Doctor Elliott remained with him the whole ing he died in the greatest agonies. The situation of Miss— who was in the adjoining room, was scarcely less pitiable. Her friends, however, from what little information the servant had been able to give, had by this time traced where she was, and soon afterwards a gentleman conveyed her to her father's house The most remarkable part of this dreadful af fair is, that after his death Miss -- and he friends for the first, discovered that Capt. M. was a married man, and has a wife living. - An inquest was held on Tuesday on his bodr, at the Eagle and Child.

I onlon paper, July 28.
Further particulars.—It appears that Capt.
Moss was engaged some time back in the ser vice of Don Pedro in procuring people to go out to Terceira; and also that he, and another officer equally zealous for the Ex-Emperor's cause, were both in love with this young la-dy, and about 6 months since fought a duel about her, on which occasion he (Capt. Moss) received a bail in his thigh, which was the cause of his not being at this moment with the troops of Don Pedro at Oporto. His ad went out and joined the expedition, and it was under a supposition that he had unexpectedly returned, and was the gentle-man he had heard of as being seen walking with her, that he produced the pistols which were to destroy them both; and under a strong feeling that this gentleman would one day possess the object of both their loves, it was that he intended to sacrifice her life with his own! He appears to have had a considerable hold on her affections, from her ignorance of his being a married man; for, after the coroner's inquest was over, she insisted on again seeing his boly, when a some ensued of the most affecting kind. The ball with which he was wounded by his more fortunate rival was then cut out of the inner part of his thigh by Dr. Elliott, and has been preserved by the friends of the parties -- His wife is represent ed as a most interesting young woman; she was married to him twice—first in the Brazils, and afterwards in England; but he has for sometime separated himself from her, and many who are acquainted with her say that his conduct to her was very unfeeling and improper. The verdict, delivered on the in-quest, was 'That at the time of his commit-ting the act, he was of unsound mind.'

IRELAND. Atrocious Marder by Whitefeet .- It is with feelings of horror and disgust that we find it our painful duty to have to record another sacrifice of human life by these deluded and sanguinary wretches. The victim in this in-Queen's county, who acted as land agent George Healy, Esq., of Violetchill, in the country of Kilkenny. The following are the particulars of this deplorable occurrence:

Mr. Marum, besides his farm in the Queen's county, held another called Bornefea, in the county Kilkenny, situate within three miles of the Royal Oak. To this he proceeded in the course of the past week to have some meadow cut down, and for that purpose he engaged mowers from the neighbourhood. After the first day they demanded an increase of wages, which was accelled to by their employer.—The day after this, however, a fur-ther rise was demanded, but being refused, the work was left off. On this Mr. Marum procured movers from his farm in the Queen's county, and they commenced the work; but early on Tuesday they were obliged to quit, on the same morning, about 10 o'clock, as Mr. Marum was standing in his carpenter's workshop—there being then present in it an apprentice of the carpenter—three fellows, strangers, rushed into the place, having no disguise whatever on them. They immediately exclaimed, "you villain, we have you now, and we have been long looking for you A blunderbuss was then presented at him; he begged for mercy, but the villain who held it discharged it at his victim, who instantly dropped dead, several slugs having penetrated his brain. The miscreants then beat him with the but end of the piece on the face, until the features were so defaced that even his own family could scarcely have recog-nized him. After this ferocious act they departed, and up to the hour at which we write no account of their being traced has reached us. In the course of the take day an in-quest was held on the bay before J. Greene, Esq. a magistrate for the county, and a verdict of "Wilful murder against three and a verdict of "Wilful murder against three persons unknown" was returned by the jury. The deceased was naphew to the late Mr. John Marem; Mountstopford, who, it may be in the recollection of our readers, was murdered some years back by a party of Shanavests, on the ground of his having taken lands out of which the former ten in had been ejected. He was also nepter to the late Dr. Marum. Catholia Bishop of Gory. He was in his 38th year, and has left, a wife with a large and young family.

THE DEATH FEAST.

We think those of our readers who have not before met with the following poem, will thank us for bringing them accumulated with it. It is taken from a volume entitled 'Corn-Law Rhymes, and the Village Patriarch. The author, it appears from this preface, is a self-educated man, and one who has witness ed, in all probability experienced, some of that misery which he so foreibly and truly dethat misery which he so forcibly and truly de-scribes as pervading the labouring communi-ty of England. There is a simplicity and pathos in the prein which we have quoted, which cannot fail to touch a sympathetic cond in the boson of the reader. Honest pride and independence, coupled with deep and genuine affection, are fairly portravel; nor is the picture of endurance and suffering at all experented; as was remarked by a London reviewer, 'what this poem describes happeds, as, daily in England. [Wash. Telegraph.

The birthday or the wedding day, Let happier mourners keep; To death my festal vows I pay, And try in vain to weep. Some gricfs the strongest soul may shake, And I such gricf have hid: By brain is hor—but they mistake, Who deem that I am mad.

My father died, my mother died, Four orphans poor were we; My brother John worked hard; and tried

To smile on Jane and me. But work grew scarce, while bread grew dear, And wages lessened too,
For Irish hordes were bilders here
Our half-paid work to do.

Yet still he strove, with failing breath, And sinking cheek, to save Consumptive Jane from early death-Then joined her in the grave.

His watery hand in mine I took, O, still I see his dying look! He tried to smile, and wept!

I bought his coffin with my bed. My gown bought earth and prayers pawhed my mother's ring for bread, I pawned my father's chair. My Bible yet remains to sell,

But language fails my woes to tell— Even crumbs were scarce with me. l sold poor Jane's gray linnet then, It cost a grost a year; I sold John's hen, and missed the hen When eggs were selling dear;

For autumn nights seemed wintry cold, While seldom blazed my fire. And eight times eight, no more I sold,

When eggs were getting higher. But still I glean the moor and heath; I wash, they say, with skill; And workhouse bread ne'er crossed my teeth, I trust it never wilk.

But when the day on which John died, Returns with all its gloom,
I seek kind friends, and beg with pride,
A banquet for the tomb.

One friend, my brother James, at least Comes then with me to dine; Let others keep the Marriage feast, The Funeral feast is mine.

For then on him I fondly call, And then he lives again! To-morrow is our festival
Of death, and John and Jane.

Even now, belfold! they look on me, Exulting from the skies, While Angels round them weep to see The tears gush from their eyes! I cannot weep. - Why can I not? My feet are cold, my brain is hot-

Thou amilest, and in acorn—but thou, Couldit thou forget the dead? No common beggar curties now, And begs for hurial bread.

From the New York Republican THE SILENT WITNESS.

Monsole fatetar.

In the town of Musselburg, near the Capital of Scotland, there lived about 15 years 200, a man by the name of Dundonald, who though in easy and affluent circumstances, was not visited by any of the inhabitants—and he seemed to be as averse to society, as the latter was unwilling to admit him to its. Privileges. His family consisted of himself, anjural daughter he had by his housekeeper, and a distant female, who superintended his muschold affairs. Dandonald was a man of hout 40 years of are, handsome in face and person, but with a very repulsive countenance. There was a degree of sternness in his expression, which at once checked all approach to familiarity, but, when he succeeded in any theme of villainy, or plan of revenge, his same were forced into a smile still more large were forced into a smile still more large were forced in a smile still more large were forced in a smile still more large were forced in the smile still more large were forced in the name of Louisz from that of her frail mather, was in the full large man of rural beauty—her dark brown lawinance of recal beauty—her dark brown looks giving a benetifel relief to the exquisite remetry of her fave, and the richly blending lilly and cornation of her theek.
