Besides, the son of your wonderful bröther has become so Austrian Prince, and you know what the Vienna Cabi-net is: These considerations, my dear Count, in spite of the sentiments I entertain towards you personally, did not permit me to wish for the re-establishment of a throne, which during the hundred days, had displayed a con-stant tendency to former errors.

I scarcely knew the Duke of Orleans. Berious differences had existed between bis father and me. Some family relations and ci-vilities had not led me to visit the Palais Roy. Nevertheless, I knew, in common the public, that there were to be found in that family, along with domestic virtues and sim-ple tastes, little ambition, and a sentiment traly French, to which the Linperor himself had rendered justice. I recollect the young republican of 1789, the soldier of Yalmy and Genappes, the professor in Swizzerland, and the traveller in the United States. He was called Bourbon, and that is a disagreeable name; but as a name, it was more than yours, more than that of a republic; a security against war. It did not prevent the establishing and bringing into practice the principles and the sovereignty of the people—the putting gims in the hands of 2,000,000 of citizens—choose ing their own officers—the completing of the librity of the press, and the possession of popular institutions. It therefore toppeared to ine useful in the circumstances in which we were placed, for the sake of peace within and without, that the different shades of political opinion, with the exception of Charles X's party, should unite under this constitution.

My assent was not the effect of any prejudice or anterior affection. I must now say, that after four months of intimate acquaintance, sentiments of confidence, friendship, and the interest of a common cause, have strengthened my first impressions. As to general assent, what was done was not merely the work of the Chambers and the population of Paris-of 80,000 National Guards and 500,000 spectators in the Champ de Mars. All the deputations from the towns and villages of France, which, in consequence of my functions, I received in detail-in a word, unultitudes of adhesions, uninstigated and unquestionable, took place, which convince more and more, that what we have done is conformable to the will of the great majoriof the French people.

I observe in one of your letters, which have all been faithfully delivered, that you suspect the Duke of Orleans of having had knowledge of a plot against the Emperor, in the Isle of Elba. He is incopule of any thing of the kind; and, from what I have been told by the republican, who denounced that plot, and by Madame de Stael, who continued in friend-ship with the Duke of Orleans, I should, independent of his known character, have been convinced that some one had calamniated him

One of my first cares, after his elevation to the throne, was to express a wish to him, that you, your children, and your respectable meher, might, if you thought fit, return tranquilly to France.

The idea was very cordially received by the king; but objections were started on account of the treaties with foreign powers, which, absurd and insolent as they are, would render some negociations necessary. Political circumstances have since charged; the diplomatic horizon is overcast; both sides are on their guard. But it is superfluous to dwell on these circumstances, since, in any case, judging from the tenor of your letters, you would not have adopted that course. I men-tion it only in reference to what I had the honour to tell you at Bordentown.

In the sincerity of my heart, I was anxious to have this explanation with you. I will not say that all happened just as I would have dictated it. You know that, in public, as well as private affairs, we never see things go entirely to our satisfaction. Your incomparable brother, with all his power, his energy, and his talents, experienced the truth of this; and you, his best friend, have had your share of disappointment. I can make no concealment of what I voluntarily did; for I love to preserve your friendship by candour, rather than to destroy it by a less sincere apology. Receive, my dear the homage of the espect, gratitude, a criticion, for which I respect, gratitude. an pledged to you.

publisher should describe his plan, and the objects lie hopes to accomplish.

There is growing up in the United States a numerous population, with literary taste, who are scattered over a large space, and who, distant from the localities whence books and literary information emanate, feel themselves at a great loss for that mental foul which education is a fitted them to enjoy. Books are cheap in our principal cities, but in the interior they cannot be precured as soon as published, now without considerable expense. To supply this desired critical considerable expense. To supply this desired confiderable expense. To supply this desired object of which emphatically is, to make good rending deeper, and to put it in a form that will bring it to every non-lador.

The whole would be readily contained in three numbers of this periodical, at an expense of thirty-seven cents, postage included! So that more than three times the quantity of literary matter can be supplied for the same money by a dopting the newspaper form. But we consider transmission by mail, and the early receipt of a new book, as a most distinguishing feature of the publication.

The publisher confidently assures the heads of families, that they need have no dread of introducing the "Select Circulating Library" into their domestic circle, as the gentleman who has undertaken the Iditorial duties, to literary usual and liabita adds a due sense to the responsibility he assumes in catering for an extended and moral community, and of the conse-quences, detrimental or otherwise, that will follow the dissemination of obnexious or wholesome mental ali Cissemination of obnoxions or wholesome mental aliment. His situation and engagements afford him peculiar advantages and facilities for the selection of books. These, with the additional channels created by agencies at London, Liverpool, and Edinburgh, warrant the proprietor in guaranteeing a faithful execution of the literary department.

It would be supercrogatory to dilate on the general advantages and conveniences, which such a publication presents to people of literary pursuits wherever located, but more particularly to those who reside in retired situations—they are as obvious that the first glance cannot fail to flash conviction of its eligibility.
