BENTENCK. Joel Clough .- After as full, fair and deliberate a trial as I have ever witnessed in the experience of thirty years practice at the bar, you have been convicted of the murder of Mrs. Mary W. Hamilton. In the history of this trial you have half the benefits of able and distinguished counsel, and if you have experience of thirty years practice at the bar, you have been convicted of the murder of Mrs. Mary W. Hamilton. In the history of this trial you have half the benefits of able and distinguished counsel, and if you had been their brother instead of their client, the tender ties of such a connection could not have added to the uniting zeal, the laborious and honourable efforts, the exertion of professional talents, the thrilling and soul subduing eloquence with which you have been defended. The jury were literally of your own selection, you were not captious and troublesome in making that belection, but you did it with prudence and discretion, and not a jurior was elected but in accordance with your own feelings. The counsel for the St te conducted the cause with beingnity and mercy,—but with those talents for which mey are distinguished, and that frimness for which as men of virtue and of nonour they disc to the stort, when they discovered Mr. Simpson in the room which he had occupied. Mr. Dobins, and occupied. Mr. Simpson in the room which he had occupied. Mr. Simpson in the room which he had occupied. Mr. Simpson in the room which he had occupied.
