First Session.
IN SENATE-Monday, Dec. 2. THE LATE SENATOR JOHNSON.

THE LATE SENATOR JOHNSON.
The resolution of respect to the memory of Alexander Buckner having been agreed toMr. Clay rose and said, that the adoption regularly the motion of this resolution reminded him of a severe loss which the public and hunself bad surtice the motion of the m to speak. He left regret that the gentleman had not been able yet to take his seat, on whom it would more properly have devolved, to submit the motion which he now proposed to off r. He desired to call the attention of the Senate to the melancholy death of a mem-books 25 way since they last met together moned away since they last met together, under cur-cumstances of the most distressing nature. hem to the its surplus. He was a man who possessed the rare quality of a part of of making a favourable impression on all persons who knew him, and who never failed, oz prence has acquaintance, to conciliate the esteem both of friends and opponents; for whenever he fought, he fought manfully, but always afterwards cherished the kindest feelings towards those less than who had been his adversaries. During the last summer, perhaps all the members of the Se-nate had had reason to regret some bereasen, but one issent with per of con evenue bore of con evenue bore increased his neighbourhood, and swept of mannount, the increased discourse of his oldest friends and acquiant amount of country, but amidst all this desolution of country, but amidst all this desolution. country, but amidst all this desolation, there had occurred no instance of individual

AWFULLY SUDDEN DEATH.

A death under circumstances singularly impressive and calculated to arrest the attention of the thoughtless, the moralist and the divine, lately occurred at the house of a Mr. Sparkes in the town. A few friends were spending that evening over what is termed a friendly game at cards, amongst whom wa he deceased, Mr. Abraham Moss. During the sitting, a stranger friend from Birmingham, arrived, who, on observing Moss, said, 'Aye, Moss! are you alive? I thought you were dead,' and was answered. 'Yes I'm alive, but I shouldn't mind dying, only the people would say, poor Moss is dead? The play proceeded for a short time, with much anmittee had performed the duty cheerfulness and humor; when Moss exclaimed, holding up the the queen of hearts, . This is my last trick'—laid down his card—his head—and died! The consterration of the party may be imagined. A surgeon was in startly called in, who opened an artery, a few drops of blood effused, but the vital spirk had fled. The following day an inquest was held at the Balloon, and the verdict, 'Deet by the visitation of God' returned. The deceas-
