marked, no reaper of equal skill has since entered. All his sketches, whether of persons or manners, bear evidence of close observation. He endeavoured to bring his lessons home to the bosoms of his readers; but not in the mode of Aristophanes, who hoisted his philosopher to the clouds in a basket, thence to lecture to his pupils below; nor like Villiers, who exhibited the living general and the admired poet in farce or, like Foote, who entertained the public with the natural defects of the impassioned minister of the Gospel, and assumed the dress and mimicked the manners of those he satirized and burlesqued; but, like Addison, he presented a delightful, moral, literary work, drawn from his own powers, with the interest of fiction, and the illustration and force of moral truth.

From the Washington Mirror.
A beautiful edition, in pamphlet form, of the Discourse bearing the above title, has just issued from the press of the National Intelligencer. The perusal of this address is well calculated to rekindle the curiosity which is eagerly expected its publication from the time when it was pronounced.

Of the many eminent men to whom our nation has given birth, few have acquired and maintained so strong a hold on public admiration as William Wirt. One of the most distinguished lawyers of his country, he was distinguished by the highest rank of a profession which, in this country, is held in high respect. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character. He was a man of high talents, and of a noble character.

such as the world could not give, and cannot take away. His death, in the anticipations which lay before him, was peaceful and triumphant; not the triumph of the soldier, who had conquered the difficulties of science, and acquired applause by the extent and accuracy, and abundance of his learning; not of the patriot, who had given his blood to his country and his fellow-men, who they had a right to as a hero; but of the profound jurist and eloquent advocate, who had reached the summit of his profession, and received the award of equal rank with the proudest and the strongest; no, nor even of the father and the husband, who had discharged all his duties with a beauty and fidelity which left nothing to regret; but it was the triumph of faith in the redemption purchased by atoning blood.

GREAT AGE OF AN ORANGE TREE.
There is an orange tree, still living and vigorous, in the nursery at Versailles, which is well ascertained to be above 400 years old. It is designated "The Bourbon," having belonged to the celebrated constable of that name in the beginning of the 16th century, and being consecrated to the crown in 1532, at which time it was 151 years old. A crown is placed in the tub in which it is planted, with this inscription—Down in 1421.

LONDON, April 16.
An air balloon is making a name for itself in France, upon an entire new plan; it is made of the membrane of an animal, a new discovery and a secret, and is to be filled with gas never yet used or made. Two experiments have been made with small ones, which have answered infinitely beyond expectations. Four men, besides the inventor, are to go up with provisions for this fortnight's voyage. It is remarkable that this person has found out a means for preventing the least escape of the air, or change of it.

From the New Yorker.
ARC C EXPERIMENT.
Donatich has been received in London from Capt. Back and his gallant band to the close of 1833, by which it appears that he still perseveres in his enterprise with unflinching hope and unshaken courage. We do not learn that he is yet been apprised of the welcome return of Capt. Ross and his crew, and it is perhaps better that he should not be. We should certainly infer from the westerly course which he has pursued since our last previous advice, as also from the fact that he has gained little in latitude, that he intends visiting the shores of the Pacific, by the Mackenzie or Coppermine rivers; but this would be inconsistent with the original object of his expedition and with the supposition that he is yet unaware of the return of his hardy predecessor.
