TWENTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1834.

This day commenced, at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, the Second Session of the Twenty-Third Congress.

Messrs. White and Swift were appointed a the Committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Knight submitted the following resolution, which was also adopted.

Resolved, That each Senator be supplied, during the present session, with three such newspapers, printed in any of the States, as he may choose; provided the same be furnished at the usual rates for the annual charge of such papers, and provided, also, that if any Senator shall choose to take any newspaper other than daily papers, he shall be supplied with as many such papers as shall not exceed the price of three daily papers.

Mr. Grundy submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the 34th rule of the Senate, so far as respects the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be suspended, and that the present Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be continued, with all the powers invested in them, and subject to all the duties imposed on them by the resolution of the Senate of the 25th day of June, 1834.

Mr. Grundy said he had been instructed to offer this resolution by a unanimous vote of the committee. They had been assiduously engaged in their investigations during the recess, and had collected a great deal of evidence, though not sufficient to enable them to make a satisfactory report. Other witnesses had been summoned that would probably be here to-morrow, if not to-day, whose testimony would be taken, if it should be the pleasure of the Senate to continue the Committee. He asked for the consideration of the resolution at the present time.

[The 34th rule provides that the Standing Committees shall be elected at the commencement of each session.]

The resolution was taken up and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. White,

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and is ready to proceed to business.

THE VERDICT OF THE JURY.

The Court was thrown open on Wednesday morning [illegible] and anxious attention was [illegible] crowds of citizens, anxious to hear the announcement of the verdict of the Jury, in whose keeping were [illegible] lives of the twelve occupants of the dock. The [illegible] not make their appearance for a considerable [illegible] for the opening of the Hall on this [illegible] to a conclusion favorable to [illegible] that they could not agree, [illegible] very strong hope that they would, but at [illegible] the Jurors were ushered into court, [illegible] to the usual solemnity with [illegible] ringing of bells for the majority [illegible] Judge Story took a seat [illegible] and a further period of breathless [illegible] minutes occurred, till the prisoners [illegible] placed, when the Jury were called over by name, and the verdict of the Jury was [illegible] to each separately in the following manner.

Clerk—Gentlemen of the Jury, have you agreed upon your verdict?

Jury—We have.

Clerk—Who shall speak for you?

Jury—Gentleman.

The prisoners were then directed severally to rise, [illegible] to receive the verdict of the Jury.

Captain Pedro Gilbert, was the first named. He [illegible] his head, and regarded the jury with a firm countenance and steady eye.

Clerk—Jurors look upon the prisoner, prisoner look upon the Jurors. How say you, gentlemen, is the prisoner at the bar, Pedro Gilbert, guilty or not guilty?

Jury—GUILTY.

The same verdict was pronounced against De Soto, [illegible] Ruiz, (the [illegible]) Borgas, Castillo Garcia, and Montenegro. Pat Costa, (the cabin boy) Ferrar, (the negro) Guzman, Patana, and Velasquez, were declared NOT GUILTY.

After having delivered the verdict of the Jury, the [illegible] rose and addressed the Court to the following [illegible] to mercy.

"The sympathies of the jury have been strongly moved in behalf of Ramirdo de Soto, on account of his generous, noble, and self-sacrificing conduct in saving the lives of more than seventy human beings, constituting the passengers and crew of the ship Minerva; and they desire that his case should be presented to the merciful consideration of the Government."

Judge Story replied that the wish of the jury would certainly be complied with, both by the Court and the prosecuting officer.

Mr. Hillard, (says the Gazette,) then rose and moved that Nichola Costa, Antonio Ferrar, Domingo de Guzman Juan Antonio Portana, and Joseph Velasquez, be forthwith discharged without bail.

The Court granted their discharge, and the five men were informed, through the interpreter, that they were at liberty to go where they pleased. They then put on their hats and left the Court Room with a light step. A scene commenced at this period, which though insufficient to excite the sympathy of the concourse of spectators towards men, who, after a long and open trial, have been fully convicted of perhaps the greatest offence in the catalogue of human crime—could not but excite the feelings of all present in a powerful degree. The convicted parties, finding themselves left to the condemnation of the law, rose one by one, and expressed their knowledge of their unhappy situation, in rapid and passionate exclamations. De Soto excited the most attention by turning to the spectators and with an imploring expression while the tears flowed down his cheeks, addressing them in accents, which though unintelligible to his auditors, conveyed a meaning which could not be misunderstood. Ruiz repeatedly struck the wood before him, and spoke loud and vociferous, exhibiting however, the same hardened expression which he has worn throughout the trial. Some apprehensions of violence on the part of the prisoners seemed to prevail, but they quietly submitted to be hand-cuffed and led out of court.

The sentence of death will be pronounced on Monday next, to which time the court adjourned.

THE MURDERESS SENTENCED.

Sentence of death was pronounced on Wednesday, 26th ult. by Judge STEPHEN, at the Marlborough Court, (Prince George's County, Maryland,) on negro girl Judith, the murderess, of the children of Doctor BAYNE, in an impressive and solemn manner. A profound silence reigned in court, when the Judge addressed the youthful prisoner on the heinousness of her crimes in the following pathetic strain:

"You have been indicted, tried, and found guilty of a murder of the most cruel and aggravated character; a murder attended by circumstances which shock every tender and sympathetic feeling of the human heart. In the perpetration of this enormous and diabolical crime, for which you are about to suffer, and for which you will so soon have to account to your God, no one palliating or extenuating circumstance is to be found. A lifeless, innocent, and unoffending child, towards whom, it might reasonably be supposed, you could not entertain even one unkind feeling, you have consigned to an untimely and premature grave not even but under your care, infantine and unsuspecting confidence, were sufficient to arrest the execution of your cruel and fiendlike purpose, or stay your hand when about to offer to him the deadly blow. By the commission of this awful act you have, I trust, incurred the displeasure of your God, and forfeited all claim to a seat of glory in the mansions of eternal rest, and given to him the society of angels and of the saints in light. But we have every reason to trust, in hopes, he may be forgiven from this signal and salutary work! before he was infected by its vices or stained by its pollutions; and to the bleeding hearts of his wounding and disconsolate parents, whom he has left behind to mourn their irreparable loss, this consideration should administer the balm of comfort and consolation. No more, his trials on this side of the grave no more can they be stung upon him the barbed and endearing recesses of parental love and affection; but I charge not mourning as those who have no hope—but them remember that for those earthly blessings he has obtained in exchange the happiness of Heaven—But for you, poor unhappy sinner, but little hope of that joy and bliss can be entertained, unless that short interval of time, which remains to you on this side of the grave, should be more assiduously employed in making your calling and election sure. Use therefore, every effort in your power to fly to the all-wise Lawgiver of your offended God. I now only remains that I pronounce the painful and solemn duty, which by your conviction has devolved upon me, to perform. I am truly sorry it is the case, but it is my lot, and must be done, when you have upon you such a sanctified as you now present, without sympathizing with you in your awful situation. The sentence of the law is, [here the formula of the Judge was read, and in a faltering tone he proceeded] that you be taken from hence to the place from whence you came, and from thence to the place of execution, where you are to be hung by the neck until you are dead and may the Lord Almighty have mercy upon your soul."

The girl, being sentenced to death in this case, was of course not tried for the murder of the other children.

TRIAL FOR MURDER.

The Court at Hagerstown was occupied on the whole of Wednesday and Thursday last, with the trials of Patrick Ryan and wife, for the murder of John Brady. A day was consumed in the trial of each, and the Verdict of the Jury in each case was not guilty. Ryan is a contractor on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, in the immediate neighbourhood of Dam No. 5. The deceased was in Ryan's employment as cook, and on the night before his death was engaged in a quarrel and fight with Mrs. Ryan, and severely beaten. The evidence against Ryan himself was slight. That against the woman was of a more serious character. The want of malice, and a doubt as to whether the blows inflicted was the cause of his death, or whether it was occasioned by apoplexy, which the counsel for the prisoner, ingeniously argued was the case—proof of apoplectic indications having been offered—led doubtless to her acquittal. The affair happened about two weeks ago.—Williamsport (Md.) Banner.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT SNOW-HILL, MD.

Since our establishment at this place as a chronicler of the times, it has not fallen to our lot to notice a more distressing accident, nor one so extensive, on this Shore, as the terrible fire which has laid in ashes the greater part of the capital of our sister county, Worcester, on the night of Monday the 25th ult. Upwards of forty houses, including the Court-House, taverns, post office, printing office, and the principal stores of the place, together with most of the furniture of the dwellings and a great portion of the merchandize in the stores, were laid waste in the short space of about two hours.—It is said the fire originated in a carpenter's shop, where an apprentice was at work with a fire in the fire-place, which he left and closed the shop. All the buildings, except the Court-House, being constructed of wood, and the wind blowing pretty freshly at the time, when the flames burst forth from the shop they spread with such fearful rapidity, that some of the unfortunate inhabitants had not sufficient time to secure a full suit of wearing apparel before they were obliged to fly from the devouring element. A number of the sufferers are consequently deprived of all they possessed in the world. Their present situation must be truly deplorable and cannot fail to call forth the sympathy and aid of their fellow citizens.

Commodore Porter.—The New York Courier states on the authority of a letter recently received from the Commodore, that the report of his having suffered by paralysis is without foundation, and that his health is improving. The publication hinted at in the following paragraph of the same article would doubtless add much to the limited information we possess in reference to the present condition, habits and manners of the people of the Turkish capital and its neighbourhood:

It is rumoured that a friend in this country, is in possession of a series of highly interesting letters from the Commodore, describing the scenery, characters, and present existing manners of the different nations composing the miscellaneous population of Constantinople, and its neighbourhood, derived from actual personal observation during a residence of several years. They describe things as they are, with all the changes introduced by the policy of Sultan Mahmoud, and not as they are represented in works, now obsolete from the revolution which is now in progress, and is gradually changing the face of things.

Such a work cannot fail to be highly valuable as well as interesting, when we consider the long and favourable opportunities enjoyed by the Commodore, as well as his capacity for lively graphic description. We think these letters ought to be published, and cannot but hope the gentlemen in possession of them will obtain the Commodore's permission for that purpose. In conclusion, it is our earnest wish that his health may be speedily restored, and that he will shortly favour his friends of whom few men have more or better, with a visit.

DIED,

OBITUARY.

Died, at the residence of his father-in-law, in Philadelphia, on the evening of the 25th ult. SAMUEL B. SMITH, M. D. in the 36th year of his age.—For [illegible] eighteen years an Assistant Surgeon in the U. S. Army.

The following obituary notice of our late and lamented Pastor, we extract from "The Churchman," published in New York.

DIED.—In Baltimore, Oct. 8th, 1834, the Rev. John G. Blanchard, late Rector of St. Ann's, Annapolis, in the 35th year of his age. Mr. Blanchard was a native of Massachusetts, and to a mind naturally strong and well directed had added the advantages of a liberal education. The high sense of his ability and strength of character attained by his closest readers, was repeatedly manifested in calling him to take an active part in her most important councils. After a residence of ten years in Annapolis, ingulfed by the spiritual wants of a large and constantly increasing population in the western precincts of Baltimore, he determined to visit those he had so long served. Under the advice and direction of the Bishop of the Diocese, he had commenced preparations for such a step in his labours. But the mysterious and unavoidable providence of God had not permitted his labours to cease, that he might enter into rest. Two days after his arrival he was attacked by the bilious fever, which baffling the resources of art, terminated his existence in [illegible] more than a week. While his physicians did not appear to the last alarming character of the disease, he appeared to do the first to be impressed with the conviction that his death was nigh. He parted his flock with a resignation and composure becoming a well spent life, and a firm trust in the efficacy of the Redeemer's merits. Expressing a devout sense of refreshment from the consecrated elements of which he had partaken, striving to soothe the affliction of her who was about to become a widow, forgiving all, as he hoped to be forgiven, he commended his spirit into the hands of a faithful Creator.

The death of Mr. Blanchard has inflicted upon the Church a severe blow. But, of a disposition retiring and averse to every appearance of ostentation, his intimate friends, and the community of which he had so long been the ornament and the honour, can alone sufficiently appreciate the excellence and purity of his character. They bear witness that his preaching was "Christ and him crucified;" that his labours were unwearied; that the discharge of his parochial duties was out season and out of season.' They attest the unaffected strength of his piety; his manly and consistent attachment to the services and institutions of the Church; his unshaken integrity; his universal philanthropy. And to them, he being dead, yet speaketh."
