nal, but we regret to say that its prospects, for early provide for the general welfare. It cannot be completion, are not at this time, so flattering as could that there exists an approximation that any real miles of its course, with telents and zeal never surpasnot yet reached the first great source of the immense trade destined ultimately to be borne upon its becomthe Coal mines of All gany; and now the available funds of the company being nearly, if not quite exnausted, this truly great work languishes for want of pecuniary means for its further prosecution, and the millions which h.v. been already expended upon it, must remain which awaits its further construction, lie dormant in the earth, unless meens are devised of extending to it further pecuniary sid. The hope has been long cherishad, that the powerful arm and abundant resources of the Federal Government would be extended to this enterprize, then which there is certainly none more na tional in its character, or more interesting to the District over which Congress exercises exclusive jurisdiction. And when it is considered that this improvement originally projected to terminate at the Coal Banks within our borders, was, at the suggestion of the Federal Government, and under its auspices, enlarged to a work of indisputable national character, extending beyond our limits, and terminating upon the navigable waters of the west; that upon the faith of this change and the promise which it held out of the centinuing favour and patronage of the General Government, individuals as well as the District Cities and the States more immediately interested, were induced to embark their capithat further aid will be granted. With equal confidence we may indulge the hope that liberal contributions will be made to accomplish this great undertaking, by the other States concerned.

The course to be pursued by Maryland in reference to the deep interest which she has in this work, and especially as now connected with the prosperity of her great Emporium, the city or maintained to leave on the assessable property of said country perfect confidence that it will be regulated by becomes a question of deep concernment; espe- to levy on the assessable property of said country perfect confidence that it will be regulated by
