The Report of Mr. Clay, from the Committe grants and the proceed by the process of the process o mittee of the Chamber of Deputies. The investigation commenced with an inquiry into the motives which induced Ministers to allow the to suppose that President of the United States the concurrence of the French Chambers was unnecessary to the fulfilment of the treaty. The interval which had elapsed between the exchange and ratification of the treaty and its presentation of the Chamber was next made the subject of severe comment, inasmuch as General Jackson, who, in consequence of the promise made to him, confidently reckoned upon the a-doption of the bill, had conceived himself authorised to draw upon the French Government.

"In several of the bureaux Ministers were taxed with having furnished incomplete and mutilated document and with having kept back the correspondence which and with having kept back the correspondence which took place between the United States and the French Government previously to 1831. It was also alleged that the meagra documents which had been presented to the Chamber contained no memoir or other papers from the American agents, clearly establishing the origin of the claims and producing evidence of their amount. In reply to these charges Ministers urged the impossibility of printing the immense mass of documents that refer-red to the liquidation of the accounts, adding that if required, they should be communicated to the Members of the Commission. The Ministerial Deputies insisted on the impolicy of alienating from France so old and firm an ally as America. Almost all the Commissioners named in the bursanzs pronounced themselves in favour of the graht though from different metives.
