On board the steamboat Massachusetts, Capt. Joseph J. Comstock, on her passage from New York on Wednesday, a venerable man was ob-served, with a wife and ten children, who excited much interest among some of the passen-gers. His name was Sylvester Harlowe; he had been a resident in the state of Maine, but from hearing the flattering accounts of the ease of living in the western country, had disposed of all his effects, quitted the haunts of his youth, and the home of his middle age, packed up his travelling biggige, and the proceeds of his sales, and conveyed his family to the land of promise. He had scarcely located himself in the far off region of Illinois, when sickness commenced attacks on several members of his family; and having struggled some time against disease and privations, and seeing hopeless poverty approaching with rapid strides, he gathered the remnant of his little property, and with that and his distressed family and disappointed hopes, he was on his return to his formerly abandoned home.

This story was told to Lieut. Breese, who l just returned from a three years' cruize in the U. S. frigate Brandywine, and was now hastening to visit his family in Boston. It touched a sympathetic cord in his generous bo som; and having assembled all the passengers in the cabin, he told the sad tale in a feeling manner, and had the satisfaction to raise a contribution of $60, which he immediately threw into the lap of the destitute mother of the family. They had not solicited cherity, and their gratitude and astonishment were equal, when they received this unexpected and ample relief in their necessities.

It is due to the captain of the steamboat to state that no charge was made to this family for passage or meals. —Providence Journal.

TROUBLE AMONG THE OYSTERMEN. On Monday last the Sheriff of Queen-Anne's county summoned a posse, and in connection with the Sheriff's posse of Kent, came down Chester river in pursuit of several foreign vessels, elleged to be Oystering there with Dredges, in violation of the laws of the state of Maryland. Pive vessels were discovered dredging between Hell Creek and Love Point, four of which with about 1,000 bashels of oysters, and the crews, were taken. The men were released on payment a their fines, and the boats having been confiscated, will be sold for the use of

One of the vessels, after throwing her oys ters overboard, made her escape, hotly pursued, however, for some four or five hours. The pursuit was an enlivening one, the wind being high, and the sailing rapid, three vessels following the marauder, whose means of escape were facili-tated by her small draft of water. She finally passed over the swash on the Kent Island shore, and it being impossible for the heavy boats to follow there, the pursuit was abundaned.

On Thursday last several vessels were count-el dredging for oysters in the same place as those on Monday.

THE AUTHOR OF JUNIUS.

tensions of Laughlin Macleane.

"A thousand other proofs, equally cogent and insurmountable, might be advanced, if necessary, against the pretensions of Mr. (Hugh) Boyd. Among these, let the reader compare the letter of Junius, subscribed Vindex, March 6 1771, (Miscellaneous Letters, No. xci.) in which he publicly ridicules Mr. Laughlin Macleane, upon his detence of the Ministry, in regard to the Falkland Islands. Mr. Laughlin Macleane is to the Nabob of Arcot. It was Macleane who, to light by the Gospel. according to his biographer, furnished Boyd with the greater part of the secret transactions of our own government, and the intelligence he made use of in relation to the Oriental concerns of the Nabob Mahomed Ali Khaan, who largely and liberally assisted hun with pecuniary aid while at home, and "rathfully promised him be would upon his return from India, assist in clearing him from all his pecuniary difficulties." The proofs are unquestionable, that the above letter was written by JUNIUS, and that he wrote it also, in contempt and ridicule of Laughlin Macleane, who, instead of being an opponent of the Ministry at the time, was an avowed defen-dant of them.
