Yesterday hey left their encampment—passed over to Al burgh, and crossed the lines at Caldwell's Manor, under the command of Drs. Nelson and Cote, and encamped for the night about two miles from the lines.

This morning upon organising their forces hey became convinced that they could not stand against the royal forces that were marching against them. This morning, previous to binding, they received intelligence of the defeat of McKenzie and Van Rensselaer.

They therefore came to the conclusion that "discretion was the better part of valour," and delivered up their arms to Gen. Wool, who met them at the lines and received them, including two field pieces. The number who laid down their arms was about two hundred and fitty.-The whole amount of their force was probably
