> AFFLICTING DISPENSATION. We have been favoured with the perusal of a letter from a clergyman at Plymouth, N. II. from which we extract the following particulars t amost remarkable and afflicting dispensation of Providence, with which Judge Livermore's family has been visited .- Salem Register.

"Yesterday afternoon I rode to Judge Livernore's. The family were in great affliction. Samuel, their fourth son, was on board the Pulaski steamboat, of whose destruction they had just heard. After conversing and praying with the family, I started for my chaise. On reaching the deor, I found that it rained, and went back for an umbrella—on my return to the door, a most terrific clap of thunder broke in the imnediate vicinity of us. My horse leaped and reared, an i struggled to get loose, but being well secured, no harm was done. I had scarcely arrived at a neighboring house before the cry was heard Horace Livermore was killed by that flash of lightning." I immediately hurriod back, and found it even so. The little boy, 10 cars old, was at school, a few rods from father's house, sitting directly under the stove funnel, the fluid killed him instantly, passing through from his head to his left foot; - marking his forehead, singing his hair and eye brows, scarring his breast and back, and passing out of his left boot, rending it in pieces. They had just brought the body in when I arrived sit to the poured cold water upon it, and although the body was warm, there was no sign of life. He was entirely dead. This occurred between three entative of and foun P. M. I remained with the afflicted family till near night, when I left them mourning the certain death of one son, and the probable death of another. There was no lightning rod he line of upon the school house.
