A CASE OF TIC DOLOREUX.

Airs. J. E. Johnson, wife of Capt. Joseph Johnson, of Lynn, Mass. was severely afflicted for ten years with Tie Doloreux, violent pain in her head, and vomiting, with a burning heat in the stomach, and unable to leave lier room. She could find no relief from the advice of laveral physicians, nor from medicines of any kind, until after she had commenced using Dr. Evans' medicine, of 100 Chntham street, and from that time she began to amend, and feels satisfied if she continue the medicine a few days longer, will be perfectly cured. Reference can be had as to the truth of the above, by calling at Mrs. Johnson's daughter's Store, 389 Grand st. E. Y.

PARALYTIC RHEUMATISM. A perfect cure effected by the treatment of Dr. W. E. teas. Mr. John Gibson, of North Fourth street, Williamsburgh, afflicted with the above complaint fou three years and nine months; during which time he had to use crutches. His chief symptoms were excruciating pain in all his joints, but especially in the hip, shoulder, knees and ankles; an aggravation of the pain towards night; and for the most part all times from the atternal heat, an obvious thickening of the fascia and ligaments, with a complete loss of muscular power. For the benefit of those afflicted in a similar manner, Mr Gibson conceives it meet to say that the pains have satiraly ceased, and that his joints have completely recovered their natural tone, and he feels able to resume his ordinary business.

IP Mrs. Anne F. Kenny, No. 115 Lewis street, between Stanton and Houston sts., afflicted for ten years with the following distressing symptoms: Acid eructation, daily spasmodic pains in the head, loss of appetite, palpitation of her heart, giddiness and dimness of sight, could not lie on her right side, disturbed rect, utter inability of engaging in any thing that demanded vigour or courage, sometimes a visionary idea of an aggravation of her disease, a whimsical aversion to particular persons and places, groundless apprehensions of personal danger and poverty, an irksomeness and weariness of life, discontented, disquietade on every slight occasion, she conceived she could fieither die nor live;

Mr. Kenny had the advice of several eminent physicians, and had recourse to numerous medicines, but could not obtain even temporary alleviation of her distressing state, till her husband persuaded het to make trial of my mode of treatment.

She is now quite relieved, and finds herself not only capable of attending to her domestic affairs, but avows that she enjoys as good health at present se she did at any period of her existence.

Dear Sir.—Had the immortal Cowper known the medical qualities of the Camomile Plant, he as well as thousands since (besides myself.) would have experienced its wonderful effects on the nervous system. The public utility of Cowper was blighted in the bud, throthe natural effect of his nervous debility upon the mental powers, which made it necessary for him to seek relief beneath the rural shade, but the calm retreat gave his physical nature no repose. If some one then had known the secret of concentrating the medical virtues of Camomile, the discoverer would have been immortalized with poetic zeal as the benefactor of suffering man.

to perfect health under the salutary treatment of Dr. Wm. Evans.

The symptems were—A sense of distension and oppression after eating, distressing pain in the pit of the stomach, nauses, impaired appetite, giddiness, palpitation of the heart, great debility and emaciation, depression of spirits, disturbed rect, sometimes a bilious vomiting, and pain in the right side, an extreme degree of langour and faintness; any endeavour to pursue his business causing immediate exhaustion and weariness.

Mr. McKenzie is daily sitending his business, and none of the above symptoms have recurred since he used the medicine. He is now a strong and healthy man. He resorted to myriads of remedies, but thy were all ineffectual. He is willing to give any information to the afflicted respecting the inestimable benefit rendered to him by the use of Dr. Wm. Evans' medicine.

ble Cure.—Mrs. Merv Dillon, Williamsburgh, corper of Forth and North streets, completely restored to health by the treatment of Dr. W. Evans, 100 Chatham st. The symptoms of this distressing case were as follows: Total loss of appetite, palpitation of the heart, twitching of the tendons, with a general spasmodic affection of the muscles, difficulty of breathing, giddiness, langour, lassitude, great depression of spirits, with a fear of some impending evil, a sensation of fluttering at the pit of the stomach, irregular transient pains in different parts, great emaciation, with other symstoms of eatrems debility.

The above case was pronounced hopeless by three of the most eminent physicians, and the dissolution of the patient daily awaited by her friends, which may be authenticated by the physicians who were in attendance. She has given her cheerful permission to publish the above facts, and will also gladly give any information respecting the benefit she has received, to any inquiring mind.

Chatham street.—Mr Daniel Spanning, of Shrewabury, Eden Town, New Jersey, was severely afflicted with Piles for more than 20 years. Had had recourse to medicines of almost every description, also the advice of several eminent physicians, but never found the slight est relief from any source whatsoever, until he called on Dr. Evans, of 100 Chatham stroot, N. Y. and procured some medicine from him, from which he found immediate relief, and subsequently a perfect curs.

CUTE RMEUMATISM, with an affection of the Langs—cured under the treatment of Dr. Wm. Evans, 100 Chatham street, New York. Mr. Benjamin S. Jarvis, 13 Centre street, New York. Ms. Benjamin S. Jarvis, 13 Centre street, New York. Ms. Ja efflicted for four years with sovero pains in all his joints, which were always increased on the slightest motion; the tongue preserved a steady whiteness; loss of appetite, dizziness in his head, the bowels commonly very costive, the urine high coloured, and often profuse sweating, unattended by relief. The above symptoms were also at tended with considerable difficulty of breathing, with a sense of tightness across the chest, likewise a great want of due energy in the nervous system.

The above symptoms were entirely removed, and a perfect cure effected by Dr. Wm. Evans.

THE EMERALDISLE.

Far, far o'er the waves of the blue glancing waters, Sweet Erin, my country, I wander to thee, Thy free hearted sons and thy bright smiling daughters Art calling me home o'er the wild swelling sea. My heart has gone out like a wild bird before me, And rests on thy shore, as I linger the while, To bless the bright heaven that sweetly shines o'er And the bark that is nearing the Emerald Isle.

Yes, Erin, green Erin, the long years have whiten'd The dark shading lock that hung over my brow, Yet closer in fondness the chords have they tighten'd, Of the heart that is yourning to be with thee now.
I fancy I grasp the brave hand of my brother,

I see the glad light of a sister's fond smile, I stand in the hall of my father and mother Who welcome me back to the Emerald Isle. Oh! land of the grateful-where every emotion

Whose every breast in its loyal devotion, Would barter its life's blood to spare thee a tear, Oh! beautiful land whose sunny-eyed daughters, Wear hearts on their lips, that have never known guile hasten to thee, o'er the far swelling waters. My home, and my country, the Emerald Isle.

INTERESTING TRIAL FOR MURDER. Extract of an article under the head of "The Northern Circuit," in the last number of Black rood's Magazine:-

The last trial of interest that I witnessed in the Crown Court was that of a man for the murder of his wife. He seemed about thirty-five years old, and was dressed in respectable mourning. He stood at the bar with an air at once of firmness and depression. He was a little under the average height, and his countenance rather prepossessing than otherwise. From the evidence in chief of the first two witnesses, it would have appeared clear that he had been st barbarous murder. On their lepositions before the coroner, a verdict of manslaughter only had been returned; but in reading them Mr. Justice Patterson had felt it his duty to instruct the Grand Jury to bring in a bill for murder—a step which seemed most amply justi-fied by the evidence which they now gave. It appeared from testimony that the prisoner had some dispute with the deceased—being a most violent man, they said—and knocked her down, her head falling against the sharp corner of a chest of drawers, which cut it open, and the wound bled profusely; and that, while she was thus prostrate and insensible, the prisoner furiously attacked and struck her repeatedlydeath on the same evening, or the evening after, I forget which, being the consequence.

As far as this evidence went, nothing, of ourse, could have been more brutal than the conduct of the prisoner; but on cross. examination of the first witness, a little ill-looking old woman, the mother of the deceased, and who gave her evidence manifestly under the inluence of the most bitter resentment towards the prisoner, the case began to assume a differ-

It was wrung from her under great prevarication, and was also established by other witnesses, that she had herself, on the evening in question, been drinking gin with the deceased, at the residence of the latter, a miserable cellar. That she had herself fetched five quarterns of gin for the deceased on that occasion. That the deceased and the witness, at her request, had frequently pawned all her husband's clothes and those of her children, whom she once or twice sent to bed early in the afternoon, to enable her to dispose of their clothes. That the prisoner was a pilot, a remarkably steady and hardworking man, and earned amply sufficient to enable him and his family to live in very comfortable circumstances; but this accursed propensity of his wife's had beggared them, and driven them from their former comfortable dwelling to the ted himself on West River, at the forwretched cellar in which had occurred the catastrophe then the subject of inquiry. That on the evening in question he had come home from the sea, wet and wearied, but found that every article of his clothing had been pawned by his wife, and that his children were lying in bed almost naked, their little clothes having shared the same fate; and that his wife was drunk, as was also the first witness. Furious words very naturally ensued, and it was under these truly exasperating circumstances that he had struggled with his wife, so as to occasion—but it was clearly unintentionally—her fall; and it cers tainly did appear that, either while she was falling, or immediately afterwards, he had more than once struck her with some violence; but not in any way to have alone caused her death, been occasioned by the injuries which she had received upon her head in falling upon the drawers, added to the effect of violent excite-spite of efforts, tears forced themselves from his eyes. Mr. Justice Patterson observed his sgitation, and seemed himself, not a little affected when he beheld the little thing, in obedience to the summons of the loud-voiced officer, brought into court and placed close beside him. to give evidence which might seal the fate of her father. She was so very short, that he handed over the officer the footstool he had been using, in order that she might stand upon it; and even then the head of the little witness did but just come above the top of the witness-box. She was rather a pretty looking girl, and her face was very sad and pale. She did not, however, cry, though her eves seemed glued to the figure of her miserable father, who never once ventured to look towards her, and whose ears, silent evidence of the anguish he was enduring, fell frequently. In other respects, he preserved a stern composure throughout the proceedings.

"My child," said the Judge, as I thought, with a little emotion, as he bent down his ear to her, "do you know that you have come here to speak the truth?"

"Yel Sir." "What will become of you, do you think, if you tell a lie?"

She paused; the Judge repeated the question; she answered distinctly, "I shall be burned in everlasting fire."

Where did you learn that?"

"The Rible, Sir." "Have you ever been to school?"

"Yes, Sir, at the Sunday school." "She may be sworn," said the Judge; and the oath was immediately administered to her. Was not this, dear Christopher, a grievous sight to see? The little daughter called to give evidence against her father, on his trial for life, for the murder of her mother? Though in a melancholy tone and sad manner, she gave her evidence with great propriety, clearly and firmly, her tiny voice could be heard distinctly in all parts of the crowded and silent court. She evinced, as was to be expected, a strong leaning towards her father; but she admitted that he had struck her mother when she was lying bleeding on the floor. She also stated that her mother had several times actually taken her the little girl's-shoes and stockings off her fect, that she might sell them for gin; and that she and the other children had often been obliged to go to bed, because their mother and grandmother had taken away their clothes for the vile purposes above mentioned. Who could listen to all this without feeling the deepest commiseration towards the unhappy prisoner? Till he had been hurried into the acts with which he then stood charged, he had always borne an unblemished character for a quiet, respectable man, who laboured hard to support his family, and who could have kept them in comfort, but for his wife's ruinous propensity to drink. His counsel addressed the jury on his behalf with much earnestness, contending that on the whole of the evidence, the prisoner was entitled to an acquittal, or at least, to a verdict of manslaughter. The Judge, however, directed the jury that there was no evidence in support of the charge of murder, but that the prisoner had been clearly guilty of manslaughter. He then recapitulated the evidence; and after a quarter of an hour's consideration, the jury pronounced a verdict of manslaughter." was sentenced to thirteen months' imprisonthan once struck her with some violence; but not in any way to have alone caused her death, which the medical evidence had shown to have been occasioned by the injuries which she had received upon her head in falling upon the drawers, added to the effect of violent excitement and excessive liquor upon a person in her situation.

The third witness brought forward against the prisoner, was, alas' his own daughter, a little girl about five or six years of age, decently dressed in black. When her name was called, the prisoner, with an agonized countenance, the prisoner, with an agonized countenance, looked away from the spot where she was to stand; his lips quivered, his chest heaved, and, in spite of efforts, tears forced themselves from his
