HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

Nervous disease, liver complaint, dyspepsia, biliousness, piles, rheumatism, consumption, coughs, colds, itching of blood, pain in the chest and side, ulcers, female weakness, all delicate and mercurial diseases are successfully treated at Dr. EVANS' Medical Office, 100 Chatham street, New York.

Dr. EVANS' CAMOMILE AND APERIENT PILLS ON LOW SPIRITS.

Low spirits is a certain state of the mind, accompanied by indignation, wherein the greatest evils are apprehended upon the slightest grounds, and the worst consequences imagined. Ancient medical writers supposed this disease to be confined to those particular regions of the abdomen technically called hypochondria, which are situated on the right or left side of that cavity, whence comes the name hypochondriasis.

Symptoms. The common corporeal symptoms are, flatulency in the stomach or bowels, acid eructations, costiveness, spasmodic pains and often an utter inability of fixing the attention upon any subject (of importance) in any thing that demands vigour or courage. Also languidness—the mind becomes irritable, thoughtful, desponding, melancholy and dejected, accompanied by a total derangement of the nervous system. The mental feelings and peculiar train of ideas that haunt the imagination and overwhelm the judgment, exhibit an infinite diversity. The wisest and best of men are so open to this affliction as the weakest.

Cause. A sedentary life of any kind, especially severe study, protracted to a late hour in the night, and rarely relieved by social intercourse or exercise, a disordered habit, great excess in eating and drinking, immoderate use of mercury, violent purgatives, the suppression of some habitual discharge, (as the obstruction of the menses) or long continued eruptions; relaxation of duty or of more important organs within the abdomen is a frequent cause.

Treatment. The principal objects of treatment are, to remove indigestion, strengthen the body, and enliven the spirits, which may be promoted by exercise, early hours, regular meals, pleasant conversation—the bowels (if costive) should be carefully regulated by the occasional use of a mild aperient. We know nothing better adapted to obtain this end, than Dr. Wm. Evans' Aperient Pills—being mild and certain in their operation. The bowels being once cleansed, his inextinguishable Camomile Pills, (which are tonic, anodyne, and anti-spasmodic) are an infallible remedy, and without dispute have proved a great blessing to the numerous patients.

Some physicians have recommended a free use of mercury, but it should not be resorted to; in many cases it greatly aggravates the symptoms.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR ISAAC COFFIN.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

There were some things about this personage too much out of the common course to allow of letting him go down to his grave without a volley. Our readers all know that the Admiral was a Bostonian. He loved to speak of the times when he was a "dirty faced little rascal," licking molasses with the boys on Long Wharf. This was before the Revolution. The veterans say that his family, which we have always heard was rather of humble condition than otherwise, resided in Province House Court.

Isaac was not destined, however, to be always licking molasses. There was a spirit in him which yearned for activity and adventure, and we find him in the British Navy at a very early date. In this service no man more thoroughly earned that advancement and reputation which are both so hard to be earned. He went regularly and rigorously, we believe, through all the ordinary grades, till he reached the fourth step from the summit of a list which is always long enough to discharge the hardest aspirant. During this long service he must have lived over strange scenes. Indeed, we know very well that he did so, and can only regret that we hear nothing of a memoir appearing which should embody the spirit of these things.

At one time the Duke of Clarence was under him—as midshipman, we believe. William got greatly attached to his commander too, who, though "rude in speech" sometimes, had yet, as the Indians say, a soft heart and a large one. As Duke and King, the midly afterward did all he could for Coffin's promotion, nor was he content to relinquish his society after coming to the throne. It is about three years since William, inviting him to dine, was informed by the Admiral that the gout, his great enemy, had wholly disabled him; he was obliged to be trundled about in an easy chair. "Well, then, come with your chair," was Royal Sailor's response to his old comrade, and go with his easy chair he did. He had long before this received a splendid medal on some occasion from his Sovereign's hand. This he carried with him on land and sea, and he had it when he was cast adrift on the Atlantic ten years or more ago by the burning of the "Boston." It was the only article saved out of all his chattels, but his happiness was complete when it was held up to him on Captain Mackay's deck, while the helpless hero lay there flat on his back.

This we have from a spectator of the scene. Our neighbor, Osgood, the artist, was on board the Boston. He describes the fire, (lightning in a cottonship,) and the whole scene, as terrific. The sea ran mountains high, and it seemed doubtful if a boat could live, yet the Admiral never blanched. He was disabled, and his companions were very anxious to save him. Mr. O. says that as several were about to go below for that purpose, they encountered the veteran at the head of the cabin stairs. He, having heard of the danger, had ascended (thus far by the assistance of his servant, and with great and painful exertion). A mattress was laid in the whale-boat, which was on the quarter. On this he was placed, with his servant by his side, while a man was stationed at each tackle. He at the bows seemed well aware of the critical situation in which they were placed; but the man at the stern took out his knife, and, when the wave rose to the boat, cut the tackle, so that when the latter rose again, the other end being fast, the boat was half filled with water, and the sailor at the stern thrown into the deep. By this time the bow-tackle was unhooked, the old tar taken, half drowned, from the sea, to receive a pretty severe reprimand from the fearless man whom he had so unintentionally immersed in a cold bath.

Thus this scene went on till all were afloat in boats, three hundred miles from land. One soon died of exhaustion. The rest were on allowances of a third of a biscuit and a gill of water a day. The Admiral not only shared all, but he alone kept up the life of the company, giving them every encouragement, and winding up occasionally with one of his best songs. "Oh, my lads," he roared out at one time, "don't look so eagerly at my old carcass. Here's a young painter will make a much better meal." Fortunately, this lasted but a night and a day. The passengers got into this port not long after. The Admiral went to the Fremont again, just as if all was not lost. Moreover, he sat to the artist, and paid him double price. He also gave Capt. Mackay, who rescued the company, a douceur of five hundred dollars and a splendid gold watch.

This is a long story, but it shows the whole man. He was a sailor of the old school. Smollett would have gloried in him, but he was too good for Smollett. With all his little eccentricities, and ill-disciplined as he was, there was a sound sense and sterling Yankee spirit at the bottom, which still kept him erect, and sent him ahead. Yet, to his showiness were added a gallantry and generosity that flinched from nothing. His impulses were noble, and he yielded to them. He once commanded a ship when a man was knocked overboard in a gale; his comrades hesitated, but not Coffin; in five minutes he had the fellow on deck again, heels over head. "Ah, you blackguard," he cried, as he shook the water out of his trousers, "You've cast me a new hat."

At another time he had a fire, suddenly discovered below, which proved to be close to the magazine, and even the old sailors were so frightened that sixty of them swam ashore. The Admiral, however, led on the rest to the rescue, and the fire was with great exertions extinguished. As to liberality, his character is well known. We see that he has lately been publicly thanked as a leading benefactor of the "Naval School." Every body knows that the Coffin family, consisting chiefly of persons of that family, has long been flourishing, by his beneficence at Nantucket, where there are said to be at least five hundred of the name. The old man loved Americans best, after all. There was nothing like Boston to him. Much more might be added to this gossip; but enough. We hope that some of the Admiral's contemporaries who are qualified will let us hear from them. Meanwhile, as we said before, they'll excuse this "volley."

A SPIRIT OF LITIGATION REDUCED.

Some years ago, a man who had more spare money than good sense, suffered himself to be sued for the sum of two dollars; enraged at what he considered the audacity of the plaintiff, he resolved to put every engine of the law in force to "keep him out of his money," and accordingly applied to a gentleman of the bar for his professional aid to effect his object. After listening to his statement of the case, the attorney demanded a fee of only three dollars, which the defendant promptly paid down, highly gratified with the smallness of the sum.—The attorney went to the magistrate's office and paid the debt and costs with the three dollars which he had just received from his client. They met in a few days after, when he inquired of the attorney whether he had attended the case, and what had been the result.—"Yes, sir, replied the lawyer, and I have completely nonsuited the plaintiff; he'll never trouble you more.—Independent Rep.

HARD HIT.

Mr. Bildad W.—of K.—, one of the pleasantest towns in Plymouth county, Massachusetts, was a stone cutter and withal given to hard jokes. One morning, as he was busily at work surrounded as usual by a number of tombstones carved out with the usual inscription—"In memory," he was greeted by Dr. E.—, who was riding by on a visit to some of his patients. "Good morning, Mr. W.—," said the doctor; "hard at work, I see; you finish your grave stones as far as 'in memory of,' and then wait, I suppose, to see who wants a monument next." "Why, yes," replied the old man, resting a moment on his mallet, "unless somebody is sick, and you are doctoring them, and then I keep right on!" [Northern Courier.]

NOTICE.

The Commissioners for Anne Arundel county will meet at the court house in the city of Annapolis, on TUESDAY, the 17th day of September next, for the purpose of hearing appeals and making transfers, and transacting the ordinary business of the Levy Court.
