Introduction

At the request of Delegate Casper R. Taylor, Jr., Speaker of the Maryland House of Delegates, the Maryland State Archives is pleased to present the 2001 Speaker's Society Directory. The following biographical sketches and accompanying photographs are drawn primarily from the historical collection of Maryland Manual biographies. They represent the state of the biographical file at the time a member of the Society left state-wide public service, and are not intended as current biographies, except for recently deceased members, and anyone currently in State service as reflected in the web-based Maryland Manual On-Line.

The directory is also available on line at the Maryland State Archives web site: mdsa.net. The profiles can be accessed in electronic form from the Former Delegates page of the Manual On-Line and by name using the Search the Archives option on the Maryland State Archives homepage (mdsa.net). In addition, this year's publication has a list of all former Speakers of the House from 1650 through the present session. Finally, in an effort to pay tribute to recently deceased members of the Society, the In Memoriam section recognizes the members lost since the last meeting. Future editions can encompass anyone inadvertently missed, and the Archives would be grateful if any omissions were brought to our attention.

This volume was prepared by the staff of the Maryland State Archives, including intern Jennifer Cupani of Middlebury College, Research Archivist Karen Dunaway, Archives Webmaster and Editor for Electronic Publications Lynne MacAdam, and Director of Biographical Research, Emily Oland Squires. The Archives welcomes volunteers and financial support for student interns to expand and improve upon what we have begun. Any contributions are tax deductible and will be applied directly to the specific purposes for which they are given as provided for in the legislation creating the State Archives Fund enacted in 1993.

Finally, the Archives would like to encourage members of the Speaker's Society to continue updating our biographical files. Please do not hesitate to contact Emily Oland Squires, regarding any contributions, including family information, photographs and office-related memorabilia, that would provide a more complete and accurate account of members' careers. Emily may be reached at 410-260-6443 or emilyo@mdarchives.state.md.us. We would hope that the Speaker's Society would look upon the collection of additional biographical information about its members, and the preparation of biographies in electronic form on the web, as an achievable and worthy goal. How well we remember those who represented us and what they did is closely tied to how highly government is valued and the degree to which the record of government can be improved.

The Mace

A symbol of the independence and authority of the House, the mace is used to bring order to the House of Delegates and to summon witnesses before it. In Maryland, the first mace was presented on March 10, 1698 by Governor Francis Nicholson to Thomas Smithson, Speaker of the House of Delegates (then known as the Lower House of Assembly). Although it is not known for certain, the present mace may well be the original. Today, it is placed in a wooden holder on the lower rostrum of the House chamber to signify when the House of Delegates is in session.

The House of Delegates' mace is a single wooden rod, 24 1/2" long and 1 3/4" in diameter. It may be made of ebony, or possibly oak, stained to look like ebony. It is capped with silver on which is engraved the 1794 Great Seal, designed by Charles Willson Peale, a native Marylander and one of the foremost artists of his day. The motto, "Industry the Means, Plenty the Result," was the official state motto from 1794 until 1817. Although there is no surviving record to explain why the House chose to have the 1794 great seal engraved on its Mace, we do know that Peale's Seal was executed on commission from the State at a time of great National and State pride.

The Mace was chosen as The Speaker's Society's logo because it is the oldest and most venerable object in the House's possession and because, more than any other symbol, it stands for the orderly, deliberative process of representative government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

* Special Session

The Speaker's Medallion and the Thomas Kennedy Award

The Speaker's Medallion takes its design from the mace of the Maryland House of Delegates. The Speaker's medallion depicts the House of Delegates mace, backed by the Maryland Flag on one side, and the 1794 Great Seal of Maryland on the other. The side with the Mace is inscribed simply with "Speaker's Medallion, Maryland House of Delegates." The other side is encircled with the motto "Industry the Means, and Plenty the Result."

The use of medallions to celebrate historic occasions in Maryland dates back to the founding of the colony by the Calverts. Cecil Calvert, Second Lord Baltimore, to whom the charter was granted in 1632, commissioned a medal by a famous engraver to mark the successful beginnings at St. Mary's City in 1634. It bore his image on one side and a map of Maryland on the other which was inscribed, in Latin, "As the Sun Thou Shalt Enlighten America."

The Speaker of the House of Delegates awards two medallions annually. One is presented to a former member of the House of Delegates in recognition of an outstanding career of service. The other is given to an individual chosen for his or her exemplary service to the House and the State of Maryland. Both are awarded in memory of Thomas Kennedy, a former member of the House, for his courageous stand on principle.
