A WHITE FROST. HOLD TO THE BARBER.

The fields are all in light arrayed,
The fences all are silver mussed,
The sedges gleam in snow-white braid,
Spun by the fingers of the Frost;
The Rets, like fairy hammocks awang
Beneath the tuffs of broken grass,
Onthine-with threads transparent siru
Art's rarest toys of woven-glass.

The willfora by the mosdow brook Lie willows Of the meadow brook
Lias lost the drapery Summer wear
But gleam, on every outer—look!
The silver of its summer leaves;
And far and wide, on plain and hill,
A pale and beauteous lustre lies,
As if the moonlight, fair and still. a if the mounlight, fair and still, Had tarried for the sun to rise!

Thanks to the wondross farry—Night,
That while our cyes were slumber-scaled,
Covered all restiges of blight,
With germs from her own lireath congealed
Rich is the green of laughing June,
'Mith is the green of laughing June,
'Wilay are the flowers of summer's prime,
'But fairer—grown beneath the moon—
This crop of soft December rime.

Daniel Webster's First Case. Ehemeter Webster, father of Daniel, was a farmer. In The regetables in his garden suffered considerably from the depredations of a wood-chunk, whose hole and habitation was near the uises. Daniel, some ten or twelve years and his brother Ezekiel, had set a steel old, and his brother Ezekich, had set a steel trap, and as last succeeded in capturing the treespaser. Ezekiel proposed to kill the animal, and chil at every all further trouble with him; but Daniel looked with compassion upon the mer boys could not agree, and each appealed to the father to decide their case. "Well, my boys," said the old gentleman, "I mill be judge. There is the prisoner." pointing to the woodchuck; "and you shall be the counsel, and plead the case for and against like life and likerty."

his life and liberty."

Exchiel opened the case with a strong argu-Excise opened the case with a strong argument, origing the mischievous nature of the criminal, the great harm he had already done, that much time and labor had been agent, in his capture, and how if he was suffered to live and go at large, he would renew his depredations, and be cunning enough not to suffer himself to be caught again, and that he ought some value, and that, make the most of him they could, it would not repay half the damage he had already done. His argument was ready, practical and to the point, and of much greater length than our limits will allow us to scupy in relating the story.

The Atter looked with pride on his son, who became a distinguished juriet in his man.

"Now, Daniel, it's your turn; I'll hear what you've got to say."
It was his first case. Daniel saw that the plea of his brother had sensibly affected his father, the judge, as his large, brilliant black eyes looked upon the soft, timid expression of the animal, and as he saw it tremble with fear, in its narrow prison-house, his heart swelled with flyr, and he appealed with cloquent words that the captive might again go free. God, he said, had made the woodchuck; he made him to-live, to enjoy the bright sunshine, the pure sir, the free fields and woods. God has not made him or saything in wain; the woodchuck has as much right as any other living thing; he was not a destructive animal as the fox or wolf was; be simply ate a few common verewe'll may; be simply at a few common vere-tables, of which they had plenty, and could wall sparsa part; he destroyed nothing, except the little food he needed to sustain his humble life; and that little food war as sweet to him, and as necessary to his existence, as was to them the food on their mother's table.

them the food on their mother's table.
God farnished their own food; He gave them all they possessed; and would they not spare a little for the dumb creature who really had as bauch right to his small share of God's bounty as they themselves had to their pertion. Yes, more; the animal had never violated the laws of his nature, or the laws of God, as man often did, but strictly followed the simple instancts he had received from the hands of the Creator of all things. Created by God's hands, he had a right from God to life, to food, to liberty; and they had no right to deprive him of either. He alloded to the mute but earnest pleadings of the animal for that life, as sweet, as dear to him as their own was to them; and the first indigment they might expect, if in self-she cruelty and cold-heartedness, they took the life they could not restore again.

During this appeal tears had started to the sld man's eyes, and were fast running down his sunburnt cheeks. Every feeling of a father's heart was stirred within him; he saw the fluture greatness of his son before his eyes, and he felt that God had bleszed him and his children beyond the lot of bemuon men. Hispity and sympathy were awakened by the clopment words of compassion and the strong appeal for mercy; and, forgetting the judge in the man, and the father, he spong from his chair (while Daniel was in the midst of his argument, without thinking that he had already won the case,) and the right is the had already won the case. God furnished their own food; He gave them out thinking that he had already won the case,) and turning to his older son, dashing the tears from his eyes, he exclaimed:

"Zeke, Zeke, you let that woodchuck go!"

THE REV. SPURGEON ON THE STYLE OF SOME MORREY PREACHERS.—I pray God the time may come when some man may unmark them, who, all these wind-bage may be reut, and all these bladders may be pricked; when, if teachers have anything to tell us, they will deliver themselves so that all can understand. If they cannot be their contractions of the standard of the standard of their contractions. have anything to tell us, they will theirer themselves so that all can understand. If they annot use plain language, let their ton ques go to school until they have learned it. There is something so entieing, and yet so finars, in the modern theological school, that I fel constrained to warm your constantly against it. Its mystery it abstructly, and its death is pompous ignorance. There is no fivelogy in it; it is a futile derive to conpeal the want of theological knowledge. A man with an education that may be complete is every department, except that in which he should excel, stands up, and would teach Christians that all they have learned at the feet of Paul has been an intake; that a new theology has been discovered; that the old phrases which we have used are out of date; the old ereeds broken up. Well, what fall well of the list wised of and his fellow-sages?
