THE ORPHAN.

We loved her as our own, poor child, And through the weary years, Wenursed her life with constant care, And kissed her silent tears, She strove to seem contented while We cheered her through the day, But when slone at night, poor child, She wept her life away.

We strove by every art, poor child, By every tender art And every gentle means to win Her sorrow from her heart, But still the drooped beneath our care, And sadder grew each day. Her check was always wet, poor child,

She wept her life away Still while she wept and strove, poer child.
To put our love with smiles.
And hide her sorrow from our hearts
With sweet and playful wiles.
Her lip grew whiter and her cheek
Grew puler day by day.
And struggling with her grief, poor child.
She wept her life away.

She wept her iteraway.

She died when summer come, poor child,
The child we could not save.
And hardly morning that she slept,
We laid her in her grave.
She in ver could forget the day.
Her sainted mether died:
They could not live apper, poor child,
They slumber side by side.

So I sat in my room and planned how we could manage, gradually beginning to think I had been selfish in my hasty opposition. I thought it might be arrainged. I could give up this very morning-room for him to sit in, and let him and his feeble fingers elsped it found in the pantry; and if we gave up the pretty peny-phaeton we might keep the bryugham. As to the distarragement of our family enjoyments, we must put up with it. The kindness would bring its own recompense, somethow.

I went down stairs with a lighter heart for I was conscious of a peaison of the staff hast on my doing so.
