Pociry. LOVED AND LOST.

What is the fate of him who loves?

what is the fate of him who loves Sad disappointment, sadder less--He goes through life a broken man. Stooping beheath a heavy cross; Still marmar though I may, and bend. I will not break or wholly fall--Than never to have loved at all.

I set my heart when I was young.
Upon a creature fair and frail;
Let me not say how fair she was,
Or tell again the mouraful tale.
Within my sparkiling cup of joy
This was a clutter camp of gail

Than never to have loved at all. I set my beart when I grew old,

Upon another fair and true;
But fore gets weary of its care.
And sights and seek for remething
So that the fond familiar voice,
Now coldly answers to my earl.
This better to have loved and lost.
